• RESEARCH FINDS FETAL MARROW EFFECTIVE IN TRANSPLANTS.

WASHINGTON - Success in treating sickle cell anemia, leukemia and even AIDS could be greatly improved if bone marrow from fetuses rather than adults is used in transplants, according to researchers at Georgetown University.

Using fetuses from miscarriages, the researchers extracted bone marrow and transplanted it into baboons, said Maria Micheida, one of the researchers who discussed their work at a pediatric conference Saturday. They found that fetal bone marrow was 23 times more effective than adult marrow and eight times better than umbilical cord blood

But Michejda did note that such a practice is inherently controversial in a society with contrasting - and often combative - views on the nature of the fetus.

Another ethical problem is what Michejda calls the potential for fetal farming, when a woman gets pregnant so she could sell the fetus for its marrow.

Similar ethical questions have swirled around other uses of fetal tissue including using brain tissue for experimental treatment of such things as Parkinson's and Alzheimer's diseases.

President Clinton, early in his administration, lifted a ban on federal funding of research into medical uses of fetal tissue from induced abortions.

SELF-CONFESSED SORCERER NOW SAYS HE KILLED 42 WOMEN.

JAKARTA, Indonesia — A self-described sorcerer has confessed to killing 42 women who paid him to concoct spells to keep their husbands and boyfriends faithful, police said Monday.

Police arrested Nasib, alias Datuk Maringgi, on Friday after three bodies were found buried near his village on the outskirts of Medan, the capital of North Sumatra.

Datuk initially confessed to killing 16 women, aged 12 to 30, since 1990 to enhance his magical powers, Indonesian news media reported.

However, police in Medan, about 875 miles northwest of Jakarta, told the Associated Press by telephone that under further questioning the 45-year-old Datuk increased the number of his victims to 42. dating back to 1986. Authorities said they were unsure whether to believe him.

Only seven bodies have been found and only one of them has been identified. Weekend newspapers said some of the bodies showed marks of torture.

The newspaper Media Indonesia reported Saturday that Datuk's victims asked him to cast spells to ensure their husbands or boyfriends would remain

After charging each woman $200 to $400, he ushered them to a sugar plantation 500 yards from his house, where he told them his ritual required them to be buried in the ground up to their waist, the paper said.

But instead of casting a spell, he strangled each woman with electrical cable, drank her saliva, undressed the corpse and reburied it with the head pointing to his home.

· ZAIRIAN PRESIDENT, REBEL LEADER HAVE FIRST TALKS.

POINTE NOIRE, Congo - The rebel leader who has seized most of Zaire agreed to a temporary cease-fire as a gesture of good will before meeting Sunday with President Mobutu Sese Seko.

During a news conference with a grim-faced Mobutu and smiling rebel leader Laurent Kabila, U.N. envoy Mohamed Sahnoun told reporters aboard a South African naval ship that Kabila had agreed to halt his troops before the meeting.

It was not clear whether the ceasefire continued, or if indeed it ever went into force. Even as the leaders spoke, rebel troops who have captured threequarters of Zaire were said to be advancing closer the capital, Kinshasa.

And despite Kabila's demand that Mobutu resign from his 32-year dictatorship, there was no mention of the ailing president stepping down. Sahnoun said that South African President Mandela, who was helping to mediate the talks, would reconvene another meeting between the two rivals within six to 10 days to narrow the gap between them.

Meetings focus on plans for park in northeast Manhattan

KARA LOWE

Manhattan residents can expect a new 79-acre park in the northeast section of town.

Earlier this year, the City of Manhattan purchased the land east of Dix Drive and south of Knox Lane with the intentions to make the area into a park.

"The starting process to begin building the park is to get a consensus of what the public wants done," Terry DeWeese, director of Manhattan Parks and Recreation, said.

Two public meetings have been held to get ideas from the community

During the first meeting, individuals listed what they wanted to see in the park when it was completed.

"The list was very large, more than the park could handle. Using this method working with the public, we will know what the community wants in regards to layout of the park from their ideas," DeWeese said.

Some of the items the community listed were baseball fields, sand volleyball, tennis courts, a flying disc area, a sled hill, a pond, a wetland, covered picnic areas, lighted restrooms and a multi-purpose community building.

During the second public meeting, the attendees were divided into four groups to categorize the ideas. The list included trails, roads and parking, utilities, play areas, play fields, picnicking areas, service areas, special-use facilities, signage, parking buildings, interpretive facilities and landscaping. Each group was given pictures of the site, aerial and contour maps of the site, and a base map to Eleven to 12 community meetings are planned before the master plans of the park will begin. The process is expected to take three to four months with the last meeting in November. The next meeting, which is open to the public, is scheduled for 7:30 p.m. May 12 at the Northview Elementary School gymnasium.

"At the next meeting, we will present the community with a layout of the park with to-scale sizes. This meeting will be an important stage of the process since we actually start the design of the park with conceptual drawings," DeWeese said.

The public is invited to attend the meeting and give their opinions.

"These meetings offer a good community process that will help meet the need of the community by working through the process with them,"

Tri-Delts win Sigma Chi Derby Days

BECKY WINTER

Hundreds of chanting women helped to raise money for the Miracle Children's Network by participating in Sigma Chi's Derby Days philanthropy last week

Eight sororities competed in the extravaganza, which began Wednesday night with a kick-off party at 12th Street

For the second year in a row, Delta Delta Delta won the competition.

"Derby Days is a big deal," Laura Markley, Tri-Delt sorority member, said. "Everyone in the house started practicing for this right after spring break."

Sigma Chi raised from $2,500 to $3,000 from the philanthropy, Thad Halstead, Derby Days chairman, said.

"The girls really get into it," Halstead said. "It's almost like bragging rights, but we also try to keep it fun."

The week continued with various competitions, which included a volley-ball tournament at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex Friday night and a dance competition at Bombers Thursday night.

"I liked the dance competition best because it was exciting to watch, and everyone from all of the houses was there," Markley said.

One addition to Derby Days was a Sigma Chi Derby Days scholarship that was awarded to Jennifer Gorman, Alpha Chi Omega sorority member. She was selected based on participation in campus and community activities as well as for involvement in her sorority, Halstead said.

"I think that Sigma Chi putting out this scholarship is a good addition to Derby Days, and I feel very honored to receive it," Gorman said.

Derby Days concluded Saturday afternoon with a barbecue in City Park where the sororities competed in field events. These included a tug-of-war, an egg-drop contest and a mystery event that required sorority members to search the park for various colored bandanas.

Halstead said he liked the mystery event because it allowed everyone to take part in the philanthropy.

"This was a good event for the people who weren't involved in the dance competition or volleyball. It helped others make their mark in the competition," Halstead said.

• T-VALS SHOULD NOT REFLECT LANGUAGE BARRIERS Editor,

It is that time of year again. Teacher evaluations. T-vals allow students to provide valuable feedback about professors and learning experiences. T-vals also bring about the usual surge of complaints. It is a time when I issue many of my own complaints. But lately, several comments from students have really disturbed me.

Students complain there is no way they can learn from a foreign instructor whom they cannot possibly understand. These students place their low grades on their instructors' shoulders.

This kind of narrow-minded, egocentric thinking hurts us all. We drive away some of the best and the brightest instructors from K-State. Why? Because we are too lazy to put forth the effort required to transcend the difficulties of an unfamiliar

After all, I'd venture to say it's a bit more difficult to break up with your parents than it is with a boyfriend or girlfriend, even if they're not really your parents, per se.

Over the two years Jesse and I were together, I became somewhat assimilated into the Graber family. I began to appreciate the endless Mennoulle meals that could be created from an apple core and the never-ending stories about their watermelon patches. I learned to laugh good naturedly at Freeman, S.D., and at the fact that boxes of cereal make good birthday gifts.

Diana, who was crowned Crisco cookiebaking queen some years ago, was very accommodating to my vegetarian ways. She was always concocting some sort of meatless something and trying them out on me, a more-than-willing guinea pig.

Charles, not to be left out of the foodgiving business, was very fond of sharing all sorts of cucumbers and tomatoes from their garden with me. I never even liked tomatoes until then.

So, life was merry in its own, wholesome way. I was lucky, and I thought I understood the extent of my good fortune. Looking back, I didn't have a clue.

Then Jesse broke up with me, and suddenly the situation I had grown so accustomed to was a sticky quandary indeed. I wasn't ready to sever ties with his family, nor do I think they were ready to do the same with me. Diana assured me that I wouldn't be taken off the speed dial until she was instructed to do so.

Soon enough, it was August, and I moved to Manhattan. I stopped by the Grabers on my way out of town to say good-bye. Diana loaded me up with preserves, gave me a hug and stood at the door with tears in her eyes as I drove away, just as my mom had about 10 minutes before.

Once I got settled here in Manhattan, I began to think about the whole situation. It seemed odd, mainly because I couldn't slap a label on my relationship with the Grabers anymore. Calling them friends seemed odd and saying "My ex-boyfriend's parents" was quite a less-than-flattering title.

I was also beginning to think that the situation wasn't fair to Jesse if I was going to maintain a relationship with his parents. I wasn't his girlfriend anymore, so I didn't know where I fit into the overall scheme of

I knew I wanted to be on the formula somewhere, but I was afraid I would soon become an inconvenience to them.

So, with those thoughts in mind, I maintained minimal contact with Charles and Diana during the fall semester. They occasionally sent cookies up for my roommates and I, but that was about the extent of our communication.

Then earlier this semester, I got an envelope in the mail from Diana. In it was simply a $20 bill and a note that said, 'Groceries! Now!"

It was slowly dawning on me that maybe I wasn't something they were going to be fazing out.

When I was home for Easter, I went to church for the express reason of seeing Charles and Diana. It has been a long time since I have been that glad to see someone as I was to see them that Sunday. I called the Grabers a few weeks ago, a pause where an "I love you" probably should have gone, but that's something none of us have said vocally. I always want to say it, but for some rea-

Leaders miss mark with national volunteer summit

Volunteers who truly care are wonder-

Rich people who pose for cameras are

For the last week I have read story after story in a major national newspaper about having the "volunteer spirit." After reading all of these wonderful stories, a burning question remained:

"What must I do to get involved?" As far as I can tell, there are three basic requirements for having this new volunteer spirit. They are as follows:

· Have at least a sixfigure income per year.

it takes to be a volunteer. Now I know that some of you will be thinking, "Don't we need to care about these children and their families and neighborhoods?" Simply put ... no.

We need only get together with some of our richest, most influential friends, take some pictures, turn over some dirt, schmooze for awhile and - presto! we've done our duty.

Wow! I wish I would had known it was would look good. Hmmm. ..."

that easy. Unfortunately, it is not.

Change will not occur at the behest of our most admired individuals. Lasting change occurs only when people move past rhetoric and posturing, and get to the heart of the matter.

Which is?

Which is people realizing that they are not the center of the universe. I understand that some of the men and women involved may have had very altruistic motives. Some may actually care. That is not my point. My point is, though the end desired is sound, the means to reaching that end is not.

You do not change the world by changing the world's actions. You change the world by changing the world's heart. For when the heart changes, the actions change also. But change of action does not always necessitate change of heart.

Where hearts are hard, actions are vile. When hearts are softened, actions are benevolent. The volunteer summit is akin to ban-daging a brain tumor. While the premise is correct - change is needed - the actions themselves are not the problem. The state of the heart is. America's hearts are so calloused and hardened that the plight of the single mother that cleans the office is of little concern.

Sure her lawn's overgrown, her children are hungry and crying and she contem-plates suicide every night before bed, but ...

"The bills are due, my best suit has an espresso stain, and ... oh yeah, I have that volunteer summit to go to tomorrow. I wonder if that single gal that cleans for us would let me take her kids with me? That

The aforementioned imaginary fellow's problem is not that he does not do anything His problem is that he does not care.

And, when he does not care, he does not act. When he does not act, no lasting change is effected. The question I would put forth is, does person, nearer to the goal of a changed heart? I feel the answer is a resounding no. Sure, lots of people take time out of their busy schedules to come and see former presidents Ford, Carter and Bush, a volunteer summit move this, or any other

President Clinton, Vice-President Gore, Oprah, etc. But, when those celebrities the "drawing cards," if you will - are gone, where do the people go? Home.

Back to the comfortableness of their split-level house with a two-car garage and 2.5 children.

Back to the serenity of enough food for three meals a day and enough job security for peace of mind at night. Back to a heart calloused to the needs of a lost and hurting world.

While many solutions are put forth, none deal with the basic apathy that affects the hearts and minds of Americans today. The only true solution is one that deals with our apathetic nature. That solution comes from looking inside ourselves, realizing our inadequacy and asking for help. When people quit praying, "Lord, give me more," and start praying, "Lord, give me compassion," things will start to change. For in ourselves we have no compassion only selfish motives for good deeds.

The leaders of this summit are proving as much. They are proposing that people who volunteer be given incentives. Clinton has put forward a plan that would allow volunteers to save $600 per year in interest on their loans.

The word volunteer could be defined as "one who serves or acts of their own free

It appears that those who would appear to be volunteering are not actually doing so. They are being pushed into action by superstar personae and thinly veiled

A deep-seeded change of heart and motives will. If you are a volunteer, keep on. But, I would challenge you to examine your motives and determine if they are truly

If you are not, I would challenge you to search your heart and find out why

If you are rich, powerful and famous, I would challenge you not to jump on a bandwagon of volunteerism. Rather, I would that you would make friends with someone who has none; adopt an unwanted child; or baby-sit a single parent's children for free. Do not just talk and pretend for a few days - do something

But, whoever you are, take a long hard look in the mirror. When you do, find what it is inside of you that keeps you from caring, and let it be changed.

For, if you change the heart, you change the man.

And, if you change the man, you change the world.

ANIMAL science departments team up.

KARA LOWE

The University of Nebraska and K-State animal science departments teamed up Saturday for a mock congressional hearing at Lincoln.

Forty-three students from the two schools met Friday to prepare to debate the federal bill, HR 594, which calls for the elimination of Class B dealers who sell animals to research facilities.

"Participating in the hearing was an experience that was a valuable part of my education. I learned a lot and laughed a lot," Meleesa Younggren, senior in animal sciences and industry,

Those enrolled in Contemporary Issues of Animal Sciences at either school were involved in the hearing. Students from both schools broke into teams either opposing the bill or in favor of the bill and have been preparing testimonies for the hearing for the past month.

Each team member had a role in the hearing, by being designated either a researcher or a lobbyist or by giving testimony.

"It was great exposure to work with students from another university and coordinate information between the pro and con sides. The research exposed me to current issues in Washington, D.C., and to how congressional policies affect agriculture," David Lott, junior in agricultural journalism and animal sciences, said.

During the hearing, a mock subcommittee consisting of faculty members from both schools were able to cross-examine individuals and later voted on the bill.

Linda Martin, associate professor of animal sciences and industry, was part of the subcommittee.

"I have been a part of the subcommittee every year. I actually ask to participate because I enjoy doing it,"

K-State students have been participating in the mock hearing since 1993 when the course began.

"I developed the course when I came to K-State from thinking about things I would have liked to do as a student. I took this concept and developed it," Janice Swanson, associate professor of animal sciences and industry, said.

"The course offers students leadership, communication skills, informational science skills and makes them familiar with a political process. This makes them more inclined to become involved in political issues after graduation," she said.

The mock congressional hearing lasted more than two hours and gave students first-hand experience developing a position with testimonials and evidence that would persuade a subcommittee.

"I enrolled in the course because I heard that in the past, many students had received a good experience taking the class and that Dr. Swanson was a good teacher. The course and the hearing exposed me to a whole new realm of animal science that I had not been exposed to before," Shawna Hollinger, senior in animal sciences, said.

House rejects abortion-ban bill

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA - The House Saturday rejected the Senate version of a late-term abortion ban and restored its own language prohibiting most third-trimester abortions.

The Senate had passed on Friday, 40-0, a bill banning the specific procedure commonly known as partial-birth abortion.

The House spurned that version and reinserted into the bill the provisions it had passed with 87 votes.

The bill returned to the Senate, where pro-life senators failed on Friday to pass a stronger bill than the one that would prohibit only partial-birth abortions.

That procedure, more complicated than first-trimester abortions, involves partially extracting a fetus, legs first, through the birth canal, cutting an incision in the barely visible skull base and then draining the contents of the Opponents of the legislation say the procedure is uncommon and used only when the fetus has severe abnormalities or the woman has serious health problems. Pro-life advocates dispute that, maintaining that the procedure is common and often elec-

The Senate version was represented during the hour-long House debate as the only one Gov. Bill Graves will accept.

This is the politics of the issue now," Rep. Nancy Kirk, D-Topeka, said of the House action to substitute its version. "We can pass a bill that will be signed, or we can pass a bill that won't be signed or won't even be taken up

Rep. Kenny Wilk, R-Lansing, who tried unsuccessfully to get the House to adopt the Senate version, made the same point.

"Folks, it's time to go home," Wilk said. "And I don't want to go home without something on the books. This (Senate) bill is the only one that can go on the books."

But opponents said the Senate version wouldn't prevent any abortions because there is no evidence that partial-birth abortions are performed in Kansas.

The House bill's language would prohibit all abortions in the final 12 weeks of pregnancy except to preserve the life or physical health of the mother or if the fetus had a severe abnormality.

The latter exception was added from the previous House version of the law to satisfy objections of some legislators that women could be forced to carry severely deformed fetuses that had no chance of surviving outside the womb.

Rep. Phill Kline, R-Shawnee, who carried the House bill, said fetal abnormality is defined in law.

Some also would prefer not to include the health of the mother in the exceptions, but Kline said U.S. Supreme Court rulings require it.

"This allows an exception for severe or fatal abnormality that the physician determines is incapable of surviving outside the womb," Kline said.

One place to go

At 7:00 a.m. on Monday, June 2nd, 1997, the Emergency Department at Mercy Health Center's Sunset Avenue facility (formerly Memorial Hospital) will be permanently closed.

Emergency services will be provided only at the College Avenue facility (formerly The Saint Mary Hospital) from this date on.

The consolidation of Emergency Services is a part of Mercy Health Center's continuing effort to provide the people of Manhattan and the region with the highest quality health care in the most efficient manner.

As always, in the event of a life-threatening emergency, call 911 for immediate assistance. When you do need to come to the emergency room, we'll be waiting for you, 24 hours a day, seven days a week in the Emergency Department at 1823 College Avenue.

PLAY BALL! CHECK OUT THE FAST-PITCH SOFTBALL TEAM

► K-State women's fast-pitch softball team will be competing in a doubleheader against Hutchinson Community College. Action starts at 3 p.m. and 5 p.m. at Manhattan Optimist Field.

SPORTS

What if you had an invitation to this funeral?

It was publicized to be the event of the year, and even that didn't do it justice.

Fans, rivals and enemies came from miles away to pay their final respects to the fallen Todd Stewart. He was so young, but still the death was far from a surprise to most.

It seems Stewart was finally fed-up with the nonsense and restrictions imposed on him

He was quoted in his final days as saying he was "tired of the man bringing him down." As he always did, Todd took matters into his own hands. In this instance, it meant taking his own life.

Dead in his journalistic prime "Prime?

Prime for what?" Manny Dies, K-State basketball forward, said

TODD STEWART is a junior secondary education/English. You (toddys@ksu.edu)

"That punk never had a prime." Dies and Todd had their run-ins in the past, but even though it was behind them, those words written that fateful Monday morning still haunted the writer.

He was scared to leave the house. Todd was scared to answer the phone. He was scared for his life and for that of his room-

Months after the Dies incident, the toll of notoriety finally overcame Todd. That is what brought us to the paying of final respects.

Respect, however, was one thing that Todd rarely received.

Sports editor Jeremy Kelley was one of the few who had anything positive to say about the columnist.

"The brilliance and insight Todd had will not be fully appreciated in our lifetime," Kelley bellowed over a chorus of cursing and yelling. "Someday you will appreciate Todd Stewart!"

Kelley's last sentence echoed that recurring theme in Todd's work. Todd said all he wanted to do was give people something to read. He always thought people would appreciate it.

Apparently, most didn't.

"Where the hell does he get off saying I can't recruit?" men's basketball coach Tom Asbury asked. "That kid is lucky neither Manny nor I got a hold of him. I could whip that punk myself." So it was not actually the paying of respects. A discussion of the writer's antics would be more accurate. Few tears were shed as Todd was laid into his final resting place

Music for the occasion was provided by the group, Ben Folds Five, which played "Battle of Who Could Care Less" in the background. Several found that to be quite appropriate. Asbury and Dies shared a joke about it.

Feminist demonstrators protested outside. Everyone was quite sure Todd was sexist, but people had trouble pointing out why. One such protester offered her own ideas.

"Well, let's start with him saying the women's basketball team was attractive," the protester began. "You just can't say that."

That incident also appeared to weigh heavily on Todd in his final days. He only wanted to compliment, not offend. Apparently the trauma of having to see players Kjerston Larson and Kayla Hester every week in class was becoming unbearable for Todd.

"He finally made a smart decision," Larson joked. "The funny thing is, he is scared to death of me."

That death is now very real.

That was something Kelley tried to draw on in his final statements before Todd's body was laid to rest.

"He was a good man. He really was. All he ever wanted was to make a difference. All he ever wanted was to make people think," Kelley said, finally bringing the raucous crowd to a silence.

Everyone was focused on Todd's sports editor as he said his final words. For once, people finally were listening.

And only then did people start to realize the seriousness of the matter at hand. It was no longer a joke.

"I never really wanted him dead," Missy Decker whispered to silent Larson. "I mean, he wasn't that bad of a guy. Kind of cute, I Larson nodded in silent agreement.

Asbury shared a quiet word with Dies. "He did get people to care about you," Asbury said quietly to Dies. "He made you

Dies smiled a smile of agreement, finally finding some good in the life of the sports writer who haunted him through his sopho-

Kelley brought the crowd to tears with his final words.

"Remember Todd. That's all I ask. That's all I want," Kelley said, wiping the tears from his swollen eyes. "Remember Todd. Remember what he stood for. That's all Todd would want."

As Kelley climbed down from the podium, not an eye was dry. Even Dies shed a tear, though he would later contend something was just lodged in his eye.

And Kelley showed a slight smile, knowing his job was done.

People will remember Todd Stewart.

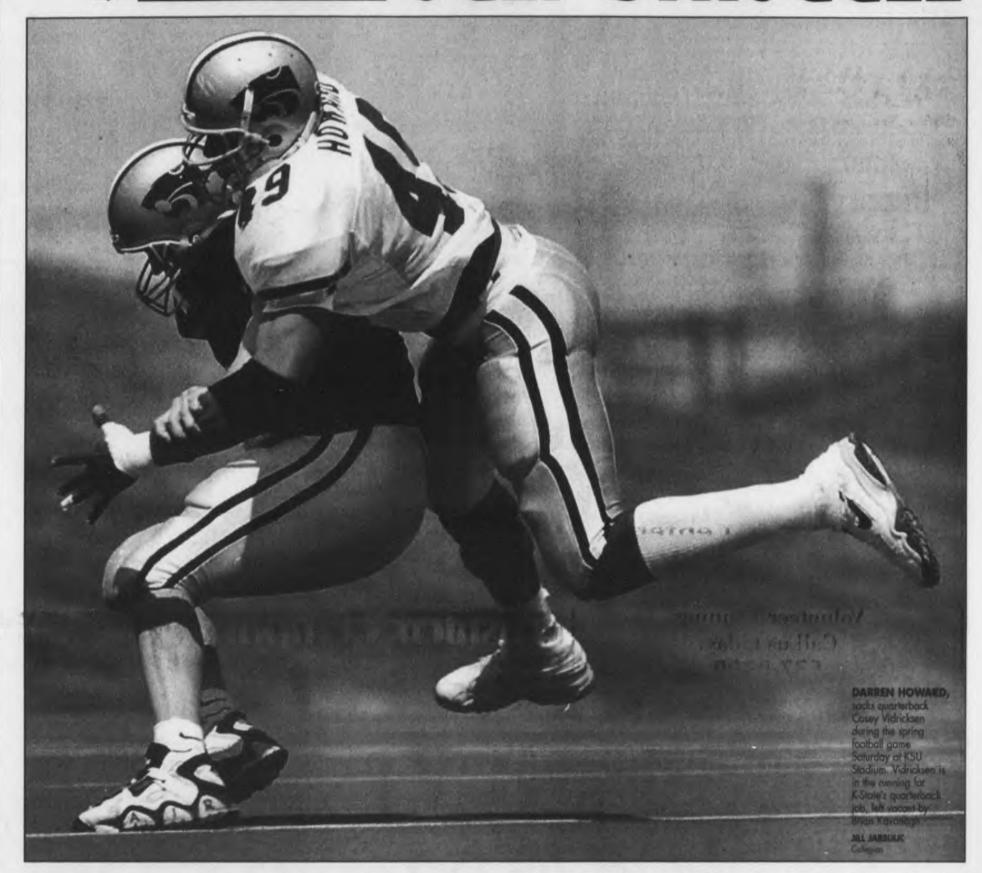

COACH BILL SNYDER talks with offensive guard Brien Hanley on the sideline during the second half of the annual spring game Saturday at KSU Stadium

CRAIG HACKER

On all points of the spring game, Coach Bill Snyder discovered problems with hidden bright spots. Looking at the game as a total effort,

Snyder could consider the spring game an GLY STRUGGLE ► SPRING GAME shows early signs of concern, benefits of team.

SHANE MCCORMICK

It is a good thing the spring game isn't the only means of measurement for Bill Snyder's K-State Wildcats. If it were, he might be disap-

"It was kind of ugly out there," Snyder said. "Defensively we did some decent things but I wasn't impressed with our defense in the fourth quarter though. Offensively, our No. 1s and No. 2s struggled. Our kicking game really struggled. I wasn't pleased with our field goal unit.

However, the spring game did provide some positives, as the Cats' White squad (made up of first-teamers) handed the Purple squad (secondstringers) a 28-5 loss Saturday.

The second-string was able to grab the lead first in front of the estimated 6,700 fans.

On a fourth-and-two from his own 33-yard line, punter James Garcia booted a 61-yard punt. The kick drove returner Mike Lawrence back to his five-yard line where he muffed it and eventually batted it out of the end zone for a safety.

finished off a seven-play drive that resulted in a Jamie Rheem 47-yard field goal. The kick gave the second-stringers a 5-0 lead.

"I wasn't upset at all," Snyder said. "I told the team before we started that it doesn't surprise me at all when something like that happens. Those young guys who are No. 2, No. 3 and No. 4 have a great deal of pride, too, and they were certainly playing with it today."

But those would be the last points seen on the scoreboard for the Purple squad. The White squad would respond and storm back with touchdown drives of 97, 63, 66 and 50 yards. One of the many battles going in spring practices is the running back position. Going into the game, Lawrence and Marlon Charles shared the No. 1 position on the depth chart. Both were interchanged from both teams by Snyder. Lawrence made his case in the start of the second quarter. Lawrence led the White squad on the 97-yard drive in which he capped off with a oneyard touchdown run. On the drive, Lawrence ran the ball eight out of the 13 plays, including a 33yard scamper down the left sideline.

Lawrence finished the game with 15 carries for 78 yards.

"Mike ran awfully well," Snyder said. "He really ran hard in the first part of the game. He carried tacklers. That has been something Mike has struggled a bit with in the past. Today, I was very pleased with his effort."

Charles responded with 23 rushes for 71 yards. Not surprisingly, Charles' productivity was higher with the first-team, gaining 45 yards on 11 carries.

"Marlon has had a very positive spring. He really played hard," Snyder said. "The biggest thing with Marlon is that he has eliminated assignment mistakes. He will be a factor in the upcoming season."

The other big battle this spring has been at the quarterback position, where Adam Helm and Jonathan Beasley have shared the No. 1 position. Helm played the first and fourth quarters with the first team while Beasley played with them in the second and third quarters.

Helm directed the White squad on the 97yard scoring drive, completing four of five passes for 38 yards. Helm finished the game 12 of 21 for 126 yards, with one interception.

Beasley directed three of four touchdown drives and completed seven of 11 passes with the first team for 129 yards and a touchdown. Beasley also finished the game with 40 rushing yards on five carries.

"Both showed some toughness, and I wasn't unhappy to see them pull the ball down and run it," Snyder said. "I can't tell you that every time they did, it was the right thing to do. But you have to have some playmakers.

But neither quarterback distinguished himself as the starting quarterback for the Cat squad next fall. This will leave the door open for community-college transfer Michael Bishop, who will arrive in the fall.

"A No. 1 will emerge with our quarterbacks," Snyder said. "Now who that will be is still undecided. I wasn't unhappy with most things. Their accuracy was a little bit of a problem, but our quarterbacks have vastly improved over the last

"I am confident with whoever, whether it is Adam, Jonathan or Michael, that they will be solid at this position," he said. "We are going to have a guy back there who is able to make plays."

Leading the way on the defensive side of the ball was sophomore defensive end Darren Howard. Spending a majority of last season battling injuries, Howard returned healthy Saturday with a two-sack, seven-tackle performance.

"We're hoping that Darren pulls the trigger and becomes the playmaker he is capable of,"

Chapman leads strong secondary during game

In one football game, a game where no matter what the score K-State wins, fans were left to digest change.

All eyes turned toward sophomore free safety Lamar Chapman Saturday during the inner-squad football scrimmage. The product of a solid secondary that anchored K-State's defense for three years, Chapman even changed his uniform number from number 17 to 1.

Even without a tackle, Chapman's presence on the field showed reminiscence of the secondary that four months ago concluded an era of experience.

Now Chapman is the fixture of an inexperienced unit that understands unlike the inner-squad match-up, playing zone coverage is a rarity in Big 12 play, and the K-State's cycling offense that showed an arsenal of receivers in the scrimmage, opposing quarterbacks will attempt to expose the inexperienced backfield with key receiving weapons. "I just got to step up," Chapman said. "The guys look

Burnett shrugs off Lockett comparisons

SUN DEE MILLS

The No. 83 jersey flashed across Wagner Field often Saturday afternoon during the spring game. It nabbed five catches for 61 yards and caught a 16-yard touchdown pass while its previous wearer, senior wideout Kevin Lockett, watched from the stands.

Its new owner, junior transfer receiver Everett Burnett, shrugged off the early comparisons to Lockett, who was recently drafted by the Kansas City Chiefs.

"Hey, it's the number they gave me," Burnett said. "I tried not to think about it. Kevin helped me out a lot learning the system this week."

Burnett, a transfer from Kemper Military Community College, got his first action on the Wildcat practice field throughout the team's past 15 practices. Coach Bill Snyder said Burnett is a quick study. "Everett made some good plays today," Snyder said. "He's caught on to what we do with only 15 days of practice. He didn't have a lot of assignment errors. He should do well for us." Burnett played for the White squad, which caught a total of 19 passes for 255 yards. He said the passing game vastly improved in the spring game and was pleased to have seen as much action as he did.

"I tried to focus on the passing game," Burnett said. "I knew my assignments for the running game. I want to get out there to make the t was either Ethan or Natalie.

Despite two sonograms, the new arrival's sex was a mystery to its parents.

"They just couldn't tell because every time that he would try to tell, it would flip the other way," said Julie Colin, sophomore in family studies and human services. "The baby was just too stubborn.

Out of necessity, the expectant parents bought a boy's outfit and a girl's outfit for the baby to wear on its trip home from the hospital and waited.

Julie, who is enrolled in 12 credit hours, attended classes until the Friday

"I didn't really feel like it, but I did," Julie said. "It was getting hard to walk across campus with my backpack and everything. The waiting ended at 5:45 p.m. on April 21, when Ethan Tyler Colin entered the world, weighing 8 pounds.

The father was there to snap pictures of the screaming infant. 'We didn't know what he was going to be," Ron Colin, senior in architecture, said. "I was not even thinking about it when he came out. I was just like,

After stopping at Sears on the way home from the hospital for pictures, 24hour old Ethan was greeted with a sign on the front door signed by the couple's 12 day-care charges - at least those capable of writing.

Julie and Ron have been running a day-care center from their home since January 1995. Aided by day-care parents, Ethan's limited wardrobe has grown to about 15 summer outfits in the week since the baby's birth. "Everyone's already come by and dropped gifts off," Julie said. "We already have volunteer babysitters."

Ethan has spent most of his time at home, with the exception of trips to Wal-Mart, Kmart and a visit to the pediatrician to be circumcised.

'Neither one of us were there," Ron said. "We figured if he didn't see us, hear us or smell us, then maybe he wouldn't blame us for it."

Ethan was a surprise in his parents' 2-1/2 year marriage

"At first he didn't believe me," Julie said of Ron. "I had two tests, and he still didn't believe me. He said, 'Go to the doctor. I'm supposed to believe that, because I see a line, you're pregnant?'

"I bought one, and then I went to the clinic and got another one. Then, when I went to the doctor's office, they just gave me another one. It was just three of basically the same thing."

With three pregnancy tests indicating a baby was on the way, reality began to sink in, and Ron gave back rubs and attended doctor's appointments. The sonogram was the clincher. 'It was a shocker to me. I didn't quite believe it at first," Ron said. "I'm a person that has to see it to believe it. So it wasn't until the sonogram I guess when I was like, 'Yeah, there's one in there."

Watching their baby was an amazing experience, Ron said.

We got to take these pictures home of this little alien-looking thing, and he took measurements and checked out the different parts of the body," he said.

Ron took the photos to his architecture studio. His instructor calls him Papa. Julie felt the baby move at 16 weeks, and, as time passed, the movements got "Actually, I can see it now," Julie said at 16 weeks. "When I am taking a bath or something, I can see it. I used to be able to feel it, and my husband couldn't. Now he can. I think that's exciting for him, too."

Julie read books on labor and delivery and, at first, ignored some chapters.

"I read all about pregnancy things, but when it come to labor and delivery parts, I don't read at all," she said. "I'm deathly, deathly afraid of needles. That will be the hardest thing. I'm not really afraid of labor, I'm afraid of the IV."

Childbirth classes helped. The parents attended a class at Mercy Health Center on College Avenue — a mixture of lecture, Lamaze and other birthing schools of thought.

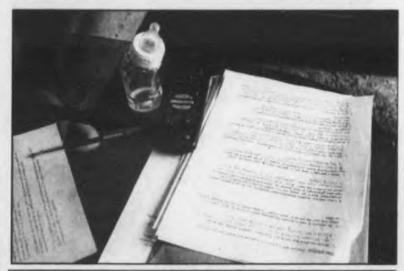

"For me, it's a pretty interesting class," Ron said when attending the sessions. "I don't have very much experience in any of this stuff. She's had all those classes already at K-State."

The couple's finances have been stretched by the baby's birth. Before discovering she was pregnant, Julie had called Blue Cross about purchasing health insurance. But then she found out she was pregnant, and plans changed.

"They don't take maternity for eight months," Julie said, "and we couldn't afford to pay the insurance plus a doctor bill for eight months."

Costs are mounting: a $1,700 or $1,800 obstetrician bill, $3,500 for one day in the hospital, plus an addition to the couple's trailer to make room for the baby. The baby's birth has not given the couple much time off. After a two-week

When his parents are gone, Ethan will stay at home with a day-care employee. Although germs from sick children were a concern, Ron said the baby would be better off staying at home.

Sandstone Amphitheatre was besieged by an unusual attack Saturday night. It was overrun by sharks — a very special breed called land sharks. Land sharks were schooling around the stage at Sandstone singing songs about cheeseburgers, pirates and Juicy-Fruit Gum.

The strange phenomena was brought about by a shift in the southern trade winds blowing into northeast Kansas from Key West, Fla., carrying with it Jimmy Buffett and the Coral Reefer Band.

For concert-goers, this was not just a chance to hear rehashed party songs they could recite in a drunken stupor. For the truly religious, the Parrotheads, a concert is a pilgrimage to Buffett's own tropical Mecca, and Sandstone was full of devout followers eager to renew their faith in Buffett's particular brand of philosophy.

After the sell-out crowd was assaulted with free T-shirts fired from a banana-shaped bazooka by stage hands, they were treated to a jazzy instrumental called "Brasilia" by the Coral Reefer Band. Then Jimmy Buffett took the stage.

Buffett looked around at the mass of gyrating, Hawaiian-shirted revelers swatting beach balls and waving stuffed parrots. He remarked that, despite the chilly temperatures, the crowd was in good spir-

"This is the end of the Banana Winter, but it's 30 degrees. So, I don't know what the hell's going on," he said. "Seems like most of you came prepared for this show.'

The band then vamped into a couple of selections from Buffett's latest compact discs - "Don't Chu-Know" from 1995's "Barometer Soup" and "Take a Holiday" from last year's "Banana Wind."

Buffett rapped to the crowd, making reference to the fact that most of his music is based on events in his life - both growing up near Key West, Fla., and touring. This was the case of "Jamaica Mistaica" and "Only Time Will Tell" from "Banana Wind." Buffett said both songs were about the time he and some friends flew to Jamaica for lunch and were mistaken for drug smugglers by the Jamaican police.

"The Jamaican S.W.A.T. team - there's an oxymoron — descended on us. They shot at us 150 times and hit us twice," he said.

Buffett no longer was playing the role of grisly, rebel pirate who dabbled in contraband. (Check out his interview with High Times magazine at (http://www.homecom.com/cobo/hightime.html).)

Instead, he has adopted the image of a hip, grandfatherly rogue who sings his stories to the youngsters while trying to impart a little wisdom.

The crowd grooved to the new offerings. But as Buffett and the band started playing his signature tunes, it was apparent that nearly everyone in the audience owned his 1985 greatest hits CD "Songs You Know By Heart."

"We've done this song for a number of years," Buffett said before the intro of "Why Don't We Get Drunk." "It's not one of my mother's favorites and, God knows, it's not one of your mother's favorites - but, what the hell - it's Saturday night!" Buffett had a wonderful connection with the audience throughout the performance and made them feel at home at his show. He spoke of shared memories of the song "Come Monday" and joked about his chart success.

"If you look it up on the Internet, this is one of my 2.1 hit records," Buffett quipped. "This is for all you, and I use this term loosely, 'grownups' who might have conceived your kids to this song - who are now behind you on the hill." The first set ended with a high-energy performance of "Fins" that whipped the crowd into a feeding frenzy. Buffett then satiated them with a "Cheeseburger in Paradise" - strutting up and down the stage with Mick Jaggar-esque energy bely-ing his 50 years of age. In the show's second set, Buffett brought the crowd down with some melancholy, touching ballads like "Son of a Son of a Sailor" and one of Buffett's self-professed favorites, "Coast of Marseille.

Buffett interspersed the set with more new material from "Banana Wind," as well giving up the stage to his guitarist, Mac Macenalli, for "It's My Job" and

CAN YOU

"In the City." During "In the City," the giant video screens flanking the stage showed a film of the Kansas City area that the Chamber of Commerce should seriously consider buying the rights to

The crowd reverently sang along in a husbed mantra during the ballads, especially during "A Pirate Looks at Forty."

The band treated the crowd to Van Morrison's "Brown-Eyed Girl," which has become a concert standard for Buffett. A funked-up rendition of Crosby, Stills and Nash's "Southern Cross" was a welcome surprise and performed superbly by Buffett and the Coral Reefers.

The last song, "Brown-Eyed Girl," was magically vamped into "Margaritaville" to the delight of every Parrothead in Sandstone. "What did you think I forgot?" Buffett demanded.

sing-along that accompanied "Margaritaville" rang out of the amphitheater and could surely be heard in neighboring counties. In the spirit of the changing times, Buffett joked at the end, 'I'll take the blame. I'm a man of the '90s.

Those who left early to avoid traffic missed out on not one, but two encores. The encores included Buffett's classic "Volcano" and paid homage to the venue as Buffett and harmonica player "Fingers" Taylor belted out "Kansas City.

Jimmy Buffett and the Coral Reefers played with an enthusiasm and feel for the audience that would put to rest any assumptions that Buffett is an aging artist being trotted out to the fans to lamely plod through a tired play list.

He conveyed a genuine joy of performing livenever making his act seem forced or like actual work (in fact, he thanked the crowd for allowing him to continue his 30-year summer job). Buffett went through his sets at times with a bemused look that seemed to say, "I can't believe I'm getting paid for

In the song "Barometer Soup," Buffett sang, "Follow in my wake/not that much at stake." Indeed. Jimmy, based on this performance, your fans won't risk much to expect solid, fun performances by you and the Coral Reefers.

WORKING FOR A LIVING

According to a trade association of prostitutes in Harare, Zimbabwe, massive layoffs in the economy have led to an oversupply of women taking up prastitution and a reduction in men's spending power, causing them either to ignore prostitutes or to visit bars only to drink and flirt before going home to the wife. To save their jobs, the association recommended in January that prostitutes raise their price from about $2.80 to about $4.60 but also requested that wives loosen the pursestrings to allow husbands to spend more when they go out.

son at the end of his show. He thanked everyone for their prayers and offered his condolences to anyone in a similar situation

"On behalf of Ennis, goodnight friends," he said as he left the stage.

Dan Knupp, who came up from Wichita for the performance, said Cosby's mastery of his craft was evident.

"It was classic Cosby. It was his thing," Knupp said. "I think he handled talking about Ennis really well. I think he gave everyone their money's worth."

big plays and pick up slack where I need-

Although five players saw time at the quarterback position, the two standouts were the No. 1 and No. 2 at the position, sophomores Jonathan Beasley and Adam Helm. Both quarterbacks said they were impressed with how the offense was shaping up.

"I like everything about this offense," Beasley said. "We're trying to make sure all the receivers get the ball. I think seven or eight receivers caught the ball today.

Beasley threw for both squads, completing seven of 11 passes for the White squad and four of five passes for the Purple squad, for a total of 156 yards. Although hesitant to favor one receiver, he said Burnett was doing well.

"He's one receiver to trust, although there's no one go-to guy," Beasley said. "There's other wide receivers in there, too. We can't shift the defense to one receiver.

Defensively, junior transfer cornerback Keith Black was in charge of covering Burnett. Black broke up two passes to Burnett, but said the wideout was one for corners to look out for due to his quickness.

"He's got game," Black said. "He's a big guy, and he's got speed. He will definitely be a good wide receiver here at K-

Burnett, who set sprint records in the 200-meter at Mehlville High School in St. Louis, said his speed and strength are things he will focus on this summer. "I was trying to exploit my athletic ability in this game," Burnett said. "I want to help put this offense on the map and make the big plays."

Standing at 6'1", Burnett is one of the largest wideouts on the team. When asked to scout himself, he said he was more of a big, finesse-type receiver who could be physical but needs to be

"This is a tough offense to learn," Burnett said. "In high school and junior college, I had the go-to role. Being focused is the main objective."

Helm said he thought this task was not out of reach for Burnett.

"He will definitely be the type of receiver who could be a playmaker for us," Helm said.

"Because he's a big target, he's easier to hit. Considering the few practices he's been in, he really showed us a lot today," he said.

For most of the afternoon, the alternating secondary featured Chapman, freshman red-shirt cornerbacks Dyshod Carter and Adrian Beard, strong safety Jarrod Cooper, and junior transfer cornerback Keith Black

Although the names aren't household yet, this is the second time in nine years Coach Bill Snyder has endured a significant turnover in a secondary that traditionally turns question marks into exclamation points

Snyder said he isn't concerned with the inexperienced secondary unit.

"This is very reminiscent of three years ago when we turned over a brand new secondary," Snyder said. "I wasn't concerned at that time. It's an issue and something to be addressed, but I'm not concerned about it because I knew there were good players there and I was quite confident they would fit in quite well.

"Lamar has really had a good spring.

Adrian Beard has come on. I think Keith Black has made some strides to be competitive for a spot right now."

No. 2, formerly worn by first-round draft pick Chris Canty, is now donned by junior transfer Keith Black, who, at 5'10" and 170 pounds, matches Canty's frame and relies on his speed to blanket receivers. Black has clocked a 4.28 second 40-yard dash and recorded three tackles, four assisted tackles and a team-leading two-pass breakups Saturday.

However, Black said he still needs to work on his technique. "My technique and patience," Black

He said he has heard that there will be meetings in the near future to discuss the idea of the postings and try to get a bill passed in the Kansas Legislature to have the site updated regularly.

"It's a good idea if they had a system to make it current, but it's pretty lousy right now," Lumpkins said. "They might as well pick addresses at random and put them on there. That's about as correct as it is now."

"Hopefully in the future, they'll straighten it out and get it worked out. I don't think they should put it out until they get all the bugs worked out. It's dangerous for families and those around them," he said.

Cox is serving a prison sentence in Nebraska for a parole violation, which KBI found out on Thursday.

Lumpkins said he found out where Cox was now 10 minutes after he got off the phone with KBI.

"I had a friend get on the Internet, and they found him. If I can find out where he is, why can't they? They had no idea," he said.

To inform people that he is not Dennis Cox, Lumpkins is simply telling people what the truth is. "I've just been telling everybody I saw and showing them the information. They look at the date of birth and know that I can't pass for 40," he said.

The Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board meeting began with more than 300 people in attendance Monday night and ended six hours and 45 minutes later, but discussed only one item on the agenda - the rezoning of the Manhattan Christian College Planned Unit Development.

After listening to hours of debate, the planning board decided to table the motion until its July 7 meeting.

The main topic of debate centered around the proposed closing of Laramie Street from 14th to

Three groups - MCC, the Aggieville

Business Association and area residents would be affected by the proposed closing.

John Poulson, vice president of admissions and recruitment at MCC, said the MCC community is in favor of the proposal because it feels it will bring the campus together.

"One of the biggest problems we have is that we are not a unified campus. We are a campus divided by a street. It's important for the growth of our school that Laramie Street be vacated," he

Another concern of the college is the safety its students.

Ken Cable, MCC president, said, "Many of our students cross Laramie more than 10 times a day so they can access the entire campus. With 3,000 cars using this section of Laramie Street a day, there is a significant potential for health problems.

The ABA opposes the proposed closing. Cheryl Sieben, ABA director, said Aggieville businesses will be directly affected by reduced accessibility if the street is closed.

"We're not opposed to the growth of Manhattan Christian College, but Aggieville needs to remain easily accessible for our growth as well," she said.

Some neighbors in the area surrounding MCC also oppose the proposed closing.

Jim Shanteau, director of the Institute for Social and Behavioral Research at K-State and neighborhood member, said the closing will worsen the neighborhood's traffic situation. "You can't increase the safety of a neighbor hood by closing a dangerous intersection. The traffic will be shifted to other streets and intersections," he said. One such street is Leavenworth Street, which is home to Eugene Field Elementary School. Many neighborhood members expressed concern for the children in this area who could be affected by increased traffic. Jerry Reynard, board member, said there was a basic acceptance of the Planned Unit Development except for the Laramie Street closing. In pursuit of a solution to this problem, MCC, the ABA and area residents will meet to discuss alternatives to the closing.

Fugitive killed; search continues for 2nd militant Texas separatist

ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT DAVIS, Texas - A fugitive member of the Republic of Texas was killed Monday in a gun battle with police who had been tracking him since he fled the secessionist group's hideout.

A second man remained at large in the rugged Davis Mountains, where the two had gone separately before the rest of the militant group laid down their arms during the weekend.

The group's leader and several other people were named Monday in a federal fraud indictment.

The gunfire took place at a bunker about a mile from the group's so-called embassy headquarters in a sparse mountain development, state officials said.

The victim had apparently been shooting at police tracking dogs and a helicopter that were searching for the pair, said Sherri Deatherage Green, a spokeswoman for the Texas Department of Public Safety.

"Shots were fired from the helicopter and from the ground at the suspect," she said.

The dead man's name was not immediately known. The two men being sought were identified as Richard Keyes III, 21, and Mike Matson, 48.

Of the two, only Keyes was charged with a crime. He was accused of organized criminal activity and kidnapping related to an April 27 hostage-taking that started the group's seven-day standoff, which ended peacefully Saturday.

Earlier Monday, two of the dogs unleashed to track the two fugitives were shot.

Both were taken to a veterinarian. One was wounded in the chest, the other in the leg, Green said. The Republic of Texas, which has split into three factions, believes the formerly independent state was illegally annexed by the United States in 1845. After Saturday's surrender, Richard McLaren, leader of the faction involved in the standoff, was held without bail in the Presidio County Jail in Marfa, about 20 miles to the south, and three others were held in lieu of $500,000 bail each. All faced charges of organized criminal activity.

On Monday, a federal fraud and conspiracy indictment unsealed in Dallas accused McLaren; his wife, Evelyn; and five other people of issuing more than $1.8 billion in bogus Republic of Texas financial documents or so-called warrants and using them to pay legitimate bills and to open bank accounts.

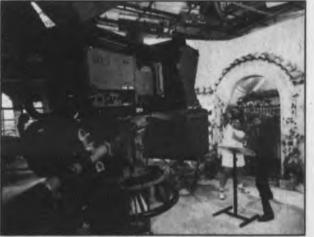

Actual losses were estimated in the hundreds of thousands of dollars. "But we don't know where all the monies went," said U.S. Attorney Paul Coggins.

"It was fall of 1995, and I thought I had something," Chuck McMichael said. "But I thought it was a storybook for my kids for Christmas."

Chuck said he started playing around with the idea, laid it out and formatted the concept for television. "We longed to see something that deals with music more than just as segues between parts of social-content issue shows," Chuck McMichael said.

"Four Fish Fly Free" centers around four fish, the main characters, that are learning about music in an underwater school. The fish, Neon, Copper, Red and Blue, are faced with the same dilemmas children today are facing. The pilot, which children's program is set to be finished in June, is about a child's fear of singing in front of others.

"We didn't want to go social-content issues," Chuck McMichael said. "We do normal childhood experiences." Chuck McMichael said they have assembled a dream team of sorts to work on the show. "We have been blessed with the amount of talent we have working in all facets of the production," he said. Terry Angus, from Halifax, Nova Scotia, Canada, is creating and building puppets for the show, performing two of the main characters and training those new to puppeteering. Angus is a five-year veteran of "Fraggle Rock," a show created by Jim Henson.

"He's an amazing artist," McMichael said of Angus.

► ANDRIA JONES RECEIVES call from ABL's Columbia Quest.

K-State added yet another player to the professional sports world when women's basketball senior forward Andria Jones was drafted by the ABL Monday. Jones went in the sixth round to the Columbia Quest, where former women's basketball coach Brian

Agler drafted former Wildcat forward Shanele Stires along with Jones in the sixth round and acquired a second sixth-round pick from the expansion Long Beach, Calif., team to secure both players.

"Everything's still up in the air," Agler said. "With the number of spots we have left, Andria and Shanele have their work cut out for them."

ABL teams post a roster of 11 players and are allowed to keep eight protected players from the past season's team.

Stires and Jones have the 12th and 13th places, respectively, and will have to prove themselves on the next level in order to earn a place on the team, K-State head coach Deb_

"The 11th, 12th and 13th players will compete for the 11th spot," Patterson said.

"In the fall, Andria will go in with the team and work out with them to get the opportunity to beat someone out. She will either stay 13th or move up after three or four weeks and be told she's a replacement player."

Jones was also asked to attend a postdraft tryout session with the WNBA's Utah Starzz May 15-16.

Patterson said the Starzz had two open spots on their roster, but until the tryout there would be no way of knowing how many players were up for the spots. ."Without question, A.J. is talented enough to play in either league," Patterson said. "It just comes down to the coach's preference relative to the personnel he has in Jones said wrapping up school has been keeping her busy, and she hasn't had a minute to touch a basketball since last week.

"I try to work out, doing cardiovascular stuff when I can, but I have three portfolios due this week," Jones said. "I was just telling my mom I thought I'd have more time when basketball was over, but I really need about 10 more hours in my day.

Regardless of where Jones ends up in the professional realm, Patterson is convinced of ones' ability to contribute.

"This is just a first step for her," Patterson said. "Once she works with them, any organization will understand what type of player she can be. This will make her a permanent fixture in the league."

PAPER TOWEL COMPANIES MERGE IN NEARLY $6 BILLION DEAL

MILWAUKEE - James River Corp. is acquiring Fort Howard Corp. in a nearly $6 billion deal analysts said will allow the paper towel and tissue company to compete more effectively.

The combined company, to be known as Fort James Corp. with headquarters in Richmond, Va., and Chicago would have more than $7 billion in annu-

News of the deal, which includes a $3.55 billion exchange of stock and the assumption of $2.4 billion in debt, sent Fort Howard shares soaring more than 16 percent Monday, while James River rose almost 6 percent.

"It's truly a merger of co-equals that are better off together than apart," said Miles L. Marsh, chairman and chief executive officer of Richmond-based James River, which makes Brawny paper towels. Quilted Northern bathroom tissue, Vanity Fair napkins, and Dixie cups and plates. Marsh would become chairman of Fort James.

James River is the world's No. 2 maker of tissues behind Kimberly-Clark Corp., with $5.7 billion in sales last year.

"We are still No. 2 in the industry, but a much stronger No. 2," said Michael T. Riordan, chairman and chief executive officer of Fort Howard, a commercial supplier of paper products based in Green Bay, Wis. Riordan is to be president of the combined company.

The merger, expected to be completed at the end of summer, is designed to produce annual savings of $150 million to $200 million a year, the companies said. Those savings will include the elimination of jobs, which have yet to be identified, said Richard Elder, a James River spokesman.

• TRIAL BEGINS OF MAN CHARGED IN DEATH OF 'MEGAN'S LAW' GIRL.

TRENTON, N.J. - The defendant's own confession and a bite mark little Megan Kanka left on his hand as she struggled for her life will prove he lured the girl into his home, raped and killed her, the prosecutor said today in opening

The girl's mother told jurors how police showed her pieces of Megan's clothing found in the the defendant's garbage.

Prosecutor Kathryn Flicker told the jury of the night of July 29, 1994, when Megan asked her neighbor if she could see his new puppy.

Defendant Jesse Timmendequas told the girl - who became a symbol for victims of sexual predators freed from prisons - she would have to come inside his house to see the dog, Flicker said.

"Unsuspecting, trusting, 7-year-old Megan walked into the defendant's house, unseen by any of the people who might have intervened. She would never walk out," Flicker said.

In the years since Megan's slaying, laws in her name have been passed around the country in efforts to see that people are notified about sexual predators living in their communities.

Timmendequas (pronounced ti-men'de-kwas), who had two prior sex convictions, lived across the street from the Kanka family in suburban Hamilton Township. He is charged with murder, kidnapping and sexual assault. If convicted of the top count of murder, he could face the death penalty.

JOHN HENDERSON

Leon Rappoport has been a professor of psychology at K-State for nearly 33 years, practices Zen Buddhism and has lived everywhere from New York to Norway. But he calls Manhattan home.

"Kansas grows on you," he said. "My two sons wanted to escape."

But Rappoport is still here. Born in New York City, he got his bachelor's in psychology only after he had dabbled in biology, history and English. His first job, in 1953, was at a youth house where he worked with delinquent teenagers.

he said, pausing mid sentence by habit to reflect. "They weren't there because they were nasty rotten fiends they were just sort of dumb."

He remembered one who had burned down a lumber yard, and another who found a pistol, went up on the roof of an apartment building, and fired random shots into the air.

The following year, Rappoport served a two-year tour with the U.S. Army as a radio operator stationed in Germany, with the 12th Armored Infantry Battalion.

"We sat around waiting for the Russians to arrive," he said. "We were deployed along the Rhine river, with "These were basically nice kids," the assumption that they would be by the river."

They did not come. About halfway through his tour, he got married. Rappoport said that since radio operators had to work day and night, he became a truck driver for the unit so he could have more regular hours.

After his tour and two more years working for a market research company, he went back to school at the University of Colorado. Between his downhill days on the ski slopes, Rappoport earned his master's and doctorate in social psychology, specializing in personality.

In 1963 he moved to Norway to help start a postdoctoral fellowship at

Some University of The editorial. Colorado students said they were fighting for the right to drink alcohol before they turn 21 as they confronted police the Friday and Saturday nights of the final weekend before they begin studying for exams.

Businesses in Hill" district near the campus complied with a police request to close early Sunday night, and a concert was canceled at a popular nightclub. There were no problems.

'We appreciate the students giving this thing a rest," Police Chief Tom Koby said, only hours after many business owners boarded up shops in the popular student district.

Twenty-four hours earlier, hundreds of students broke windows, burned couches and trash and threw rocks and burning branches at police. Officers responded with rubber bullets and tear gas.

Twenty-six people were arrested, 14 of them CU students. Six students and six police officers were injured. Two students remained hospitalized in fair condition Monday with head injuries and scalp lacerations. Junior John Cooper contended that students leaving bars encountered a "wall of police in riot gear. The students felt threatened ... in response they (students) created their own wall."

DEATH PENALTY PUNISHES THE WRONG PEOPLE Editor,

Why doesn't the government rape rapists if it murders murderers? I am not a death penalty fan and would like to take this opportunity to write why.

First off, most supporters stand by the death penalty because they say it's cheaper than life sentences. It's not. The average cost of an execution is more than double the approximate $800,000 it costs for a life sentence.

An interesting fact I have come across in my research is that between 1977 and 1995, there were 4,857 prisoners sentenced to death. During this same 19 year period, there were 313 executions. What happened to the 4,544 inmates that weren't killed? Mistrials. Retrials. Found or firing squads as methods of execution. Rest assured, they weigh the criminal ahead of time to ensure that 1260 pounds of impact is delivered to the neck. This prevents beheading and strangulation. The formula allows for a clean snap between the third and fourth vertebrae.

It's obvious to me that executions punish the wrong people. After we put these scumbags out of their misery, who is left suffering but the people who loved him? What kind of punishment is that?

As citizens of a civilized, wealthy society, why do we enforce this primitive and barbaric form of punishment? Twenty-three innocent men had been wrongfully executed as of 1995. They could've lived, but their "death row pardons were two minutes too late.

I'm serious. The thought came to me the other day when I was enjoying a frosty beverage while glued to the NBA playoffs. After Michael Jordan scored his 50th point, NBC cut to a series of commercials.

The first one was Miller Time by Dick. I don't know about you, but I think Dick licked a little to much LSD in the 1960s. I mean, c'mon, the guy makes a commercial where a magician conjures up a patch of fur that he makes appear beneath a woman's armpits. Not only that, but it looks like Dick has not cut his hair since 1969. Is this wackiness going to sell beer for Miller Lite?

The recent elections in Britain seem like a replay of an old story: Bright, young, suntanned challenger defeats tired, old, white-haired incumbent with promises of fresh ideas, fresh thinking, fresh action and compassion.

It happened here in the United States in 1992 when Gov. Bill Clinton defeated President Bush. and it happened last Thursday in Britain when Tony Blair defeated John Major, winning 419 seats in the 659-member House of Commons.

The recent hoopla over Blair's win, even as restrained as it is on this side of the pond, tends to obscure the exact nature of Labor's strategy in this election and its implications for British poli-

In brief, Labor won because it managed to steal seats from every other party in Parliament except the Liberal Democrats. By copying essentially centrist Tory policies without also importing that party's divisions and conflict about Europe, Labor kept to itself most of the swing seats it generally has to share with the Tories at every general election.

By promising to bring self-government to Scotland and Wales - which involves establishing separate parliaments for these formerly independent countries - Labor pulled the rug out from under the Scottish Nationalist Party and its counterpart in Wales, neither of which had a hope of getting the necessary majority in Parliament to achieve autonomy.

It might not seem like a formula for success to court the fringe while also stealing the successful other party's platform, but in the British electoral system such strategy has traditionally resulted in a steady accumulation of votes from all quarters, which add up to a majority in Parliament that allows the winning party to run the government and have its leader named Prime

Not one party in the British system has enough "safe" seats, constituencies so loaded with voters of one party that its candidate in each is inevitably returned to Parliament, to establish a majority. A heavy concentration of centrists in the "marginal" seats in the south of England and 74 Scottish members of Parliament make it important to court moderate and nationalist vot-

ADRIAN FLEMING/Colle

This general election might, however, be the last to conform to tradition.

British voters who loyally support a single party from adulthood to the grave, in good times or bad, have steadily been replaced by a volatile electorate, which will generally cast votes for the party that seems more attractive at the time of the general election.

In this election, this has resulted in one of the longest campaigning seasons in British history (six weeks) and the most vigorous use of media by both parties.

It is no longer possible for a party to survive on the basis of the promises in its platform, nor can an odd-looking politician hope to be named Prime Minister: tuft-haired Welshmen, fat cigarchompers and half-empty bespectacled flour sacks have given way to handsome creatures who look as if they just flew in from the California beaches

This shift toward media-driven politics has unsavory implications for policy, which might not be fully realized until long after Blair is out of office. The newly reorganized Labor party has disavowed all intention of turning the clock back on the Tory revolution.

Its being, essentially an unstable coalition of fellow travelers tired of two decades of being shut out by the Tories, will motivate its leadership to fulfill the numerous promises it has made during the election in an effort to keep the party together. The Scots will get their parliament, old Labor will get its minimum wage and the centrists will see Britain participate more fully in the European Union.

But these contingencies merely postpone the evil fruits of media reliance. What about a hypothetical situation in the future, where there are two clear, internally unified black-and-white alternatives?

In terms of policy, the two will move toward each other until they are essentially indistinguishable shades of gray. In terms of getting elected, each will paint the other as the black option and itself as the white one.

Fuller and more sophisticated use of the media will permit them to more efficiently sustain these illusions, so that more and more British voters lose their ability to tell the two

This, in turn, increases the risk that the main checks and balances on the parliamentary system of government - the consciences of individual members of Parliament and the sheer difficulty of organizing stable coalition parties - will become ineffectual in the presence of powerful media tools that can erase any wrong from the public memory and cover up bad decisions.

This would in turn deprive lawmakers of the public contact necessary to formulate good policy and the public of the information it needs to hold its representatives accountable on specific Parliament, the executive and the judiciary are all part of the same governing body, so that the British public can't hope to play it safe as we do by electing a president from a party other than the congressional majority.

ome 10-year-old girls idolize athletes like Mary Lou Retton, but Brianna Buchanan's idol is Hakeem Olajuwon of the Houston Rockets.

On April 20, Brianna out-shot 90,000 other children when she placed fourth in the Elks National Hoop Shoot Free Throw competition.

This fifth-grader from Jefferson Elementary School in Fort Riley got an early start with her basketball career.

"She started playing when she was three," Gregory Buchanan, her father, said. "I put up a basketball goal, and she played with me and her older brother."

Brianna is not pressured by her parents to excel in sports or school activities. She does that herself.

"She is a very motivated girl, and she pushes herself," Gregory Buchanan said. "She is like that with anything she does. It doesn't matter if it's a math competition or a spelling competition, she just wants to do her best."

It's this motivation that took her to the national competition, he said.

The competition began in the gym at Jefferson Elementary School, where she competed against classmates. Free throws had to be made from regulation height and distance.

Brianna's win during her school competition advanced her to the district competition in Ponoma, which she won by making 18 out of 25 free

She improved at the state competition in Newton. There, she made 19 out of 25 shots. This advanced her to the regional competition in Denver. There, her performance continued to get better.

"I made 22 of 25 free-throw shots. It was a lot of fun," Brianna said.

Her win there vaulted her to the nationals in Springfield, Mass.

"One exciting thing about the trip was we got to stay at a very pretty hotel that had a chandelier and 12 floors," she said.

There she made 20 of 25 free throws, placing fourth overall.

"I know Brianna is disappointed. But, she said it doesn't matter if she comes in first, second or third. All she wants to do is have fun," her father said.

Sigma Chis welcome undergrads, alumni for leadership conference

CHRISTA CAREY

The K-State chapter of Sigma Chi fraternity will be host to a leadership conference this summer.

The annual conference will celebrate its 50th anniversary and its second year at K-State since 1984.

There will be 1,100 undergraduate Sigma Chis and 150 alumni representing all 50 states and three provinces from Canada, and they will travel to Manhattan and stay at the Strong Complex

"I am looking forward to this year's conference. Manhattan sounds like a neat town," said Shane Largent, a senior in hotel and restaurant management and a Sigma Chi at Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

The chapters are encouraged to bring five to seven members, including the president, vice president, pledge trainers, rush chairmen and treasurers, along with a couple of sophomores.

Last year Mike Ditka, head coach of the New Orlean Saints and a Sigma Chi alumnus, talked to members about lead-

This year's keynote speaker has yet to be selected.

"Sigma Chi is implementing new software this year for the treasury, so the treasurers need to learn how to use it," Thomas Roberts, assistant dean of engineering, said. New software, risk management and pledge education are some of the issues the men will discuss.

Roberts proudly wears his pin as an alumni member of Sigma Chi and chapter consultant for the Kansas and Nebraska provinces. He is helping the Sigma Chis with the organization of the

"This is my 30th leadership training workshop since I was initiated Sigma Chi at K-State. I have only missed one," Roberts said

The meetings are scheduled late into the evenings, but there is always time for socializing.

"Every night, we are going to have activities planned. The Rec complex will be available to us, and our house will be open for tours," said Brian Olsen, junior in biology and chairman of the on-sight committee.

The conference ends with a closing ceremony on August 10th. The Sigma Chis will take what they learned from the workshops and teach the other members of their chapters.

Olsen has participated in the conference the past two years but said he is excited to have the home advantage this year.

"I am excited about having it here. It's a great way to promote Kansas State University and our chapter," Olsen said.

VA extends benefits for Gulf vets

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Regulations announced by the Veterans Affairs Department Monday will allow Gulf War veterans to claim disability compensation for war-related illnesses through 2001.

The regulations, which go into effect immediately, broadly expand the current system in which veterans have been eligible for compensation only if their symptoms appeared within two years of their service in the 1991 war.

This rule broadens VA's ability to give disabled Gulf War veterans the benefit of the doubt for a more realistic period of time as scientific research moves closer to answers about the causes of their health problems," VA

Brown said he had instructed the Veterans Benefits Administration to review all compensation claims of Gulf War veterans that were previously denied because of the two-year rule.

President Clinton last March announced his intentions to extend eligibility to 10 years, saying, "Gulf War veterans who became ill as a result of their service should receive the compensation they deserve, even if science cannot yet pinpoint the cause of their illnesses."

odd Fereday, in the final conference series of his collegiate career, went out with a bang, going 7-16 with two home runs, one of which was a grand slam and a game-winning RBI, while leading the Cats to their first Big 12 series sweep of the season. With little to play for save pride, Fereday and the Wildcats ventured into nce this past weekend and manhandled the Jayhawks, 12-7, 24-11 and 7-6.

The three losses eliminated Kansas from any hopes of postseason play in the Big 12 Tournament.

'The kids played great," head coach Mike Clark said. "I hope it carries over."

On Sunday, Fereday drove home the winning run with a single in the top of the 11th to lead the Cats to the 7-6 victory and David Johnson notched the victory, evening his record at 2-2. Josh Wingerd, who got a victory earlier this season in Manhattan, took the loss.

Kansas scored three runs in the first off of slumping starter Jason Wells, who only got one out and loaded the bases before being lifted in favor of Chris Traylor.

Traylor went 8.2 innings before giving way to Johnson in the 10th inning.

Fereday, in his fifth consecutive start at the lead-off position, went 3-7 with the game-winning RBI and two runs scored. Eric Sommerhauser went 3-6, with three runs scored and his 13th double of the sea-

Fereday normally bats fifth in the lineup behind Scott Poepard and Heath Schesser, where he has struggled with consistency all season.

The move into the lead-off role, however, might be the needed jump start for Fereday and the Cats.

Before the game against Bethany, coach told me I was leading off," Fereday said. "I was pumped, and I kidded with him that I was going to be the everyday lead-off hitter. He came up to me during batting practice and asked if I liked hitting lead off. I told him yes, because it gives me a chance to get focused on my objective, to get on base." Clark batted Fereday lead-off, and the result is a five-game winning streak.

"It's a perfect situation for him. It allows him to be more selective at the plate," Clark said.

Friday and Saturday were offensive showcases, mostly by the Wildcats.

Fereday started his impressive series by going 2-4, smacking his ninth home run of the season, a grand slam.

The Cats led 8-7 going into the top of the ninth when Fereday hit his blast, putting the Cats ahead for good.

Poepard, who went 4-5 with four RBIs, hit home runs twice bringing his season total to 14, two shy of single season record, which is Schesser's.

Every Wildcat starter got a hit, with the first seven hitters tallying 17 hits, 12 of which went for extra bases.

Mickey Blount threw 7.2 innings allowing 10 runs, seven earned, on eight hits and picked up his third victory of the year. He is now 3-1.

No. 16 Shockers are next interstate rival for Cats

The K-State baseball team will take its first Big 12 Conference series sweep into the final week of the season.

After pounding one interstate rival, it's on to another as Wichita State visits Frank Myers Field at 7 tonight.

The Shockers, ranked No. 16 by Collegiate Baseball in its latest poll, stand at 44-12 postseason.

But that doesn't mean they are looking past the Cats.

"I was amused that they saved their best pitcher for us," head coach Mike Clark said. "They didn't pitch him at all this weekend, and it cost

The Shockers dropped a series to conference rival Bradley this past weekend.

Wichita State might be on its way to the College World Series, but the players believe they have the Shockers'

"I think they have to respect us," said Todd Fereday, who since being thrust into the leadoff role has led the Cats to a 5-0 record. Everybody knows the best team in the north division is us. We just got into a funk for a while there, but everybody realizes it."

Clark said he was looking forward to the series.

"It's a great opportunity for us," Clark said. "It's a ranked team, an interstate rival. I think we'll be up for it.'

This past weekend marked the last conference series for some of K-State's finest, like second baseman senior Fereday.

"I thought this was the year," he said. "We didn't accomplish what we set out to do, but we played well."

After finishing third in the final Big 8 standings a year ago with an 11-16 record, K-State dropped to ninth in the inaugural Big 12 season, going 10-20.

Although the conference record worsened, the Wildcats' from 28-26 last year to 29-22 with five games left to play.

"We've made a name for ourselves. These seniors have been here so long," he said. "We kinda put K-State baseball on the map."

With no postseason possibilities left as motivation, Clark pointed to some records as other incentives for his team.

"We have a chance to be the eighth team in school history to win 30 games," he said.

With five games to play, the Cats also need only three wins to give Clark 300 for his career at K-State. He is already the all-time winningest baseball coach for the Wildcats

Scott Poepard, the all-time Wildcat leader in career home runs with 34, can now chase another record, the single-season mark for home runs.

Poepard has 13 going into tonight's game. His teammate Heath Schesser has the record with 15.

The time has gone by fast. Five years (I opted to stay in school for my last year instead of leaving early) of college life is just about

Two years of writing sports columns, and this is the last one you will read.

I'll give you a moment for your cheers and Over the years, there have been many highs and lows and tons of questions I have been asked. I thought I would take this time to share with you many of those questions. First, my top five questions I have been

1. Aren't you that punk columnist Todd Stewart? More than once, I have been asked this question. Yes, it happened to be that this year both Stewart and I wore hats for our mug shots. But that is where the similarities stop.

Although he might thrive on pissing people off and visualize Manny Dies standing over his coffin, I tend to like the idea of writing and

2. What the heck is wrong with you guys over there, letting Stewart write all of that crap? Once and for all, I am not or have never been in charge of hiring staff members, and I don't have control over what other columnists

3. You must be one of those damn Dallas Cowboy fans. As a columnist, I must always maintain objectivity and show no favor to one particular team. However, I would be remiss if I didn't mention that the 'Boys have the best quarterback, running back and offensive line

4. Why didn't you guys have more coverage of the women's basketball team this year?

Actually this year, the Collegian had some of its best coverage in a long time with the team. This semester was the first time I can remember that the paper had game stories and at least one or two sidebars on a consistent basis with each game. Considering page restrictions, I thought coverage of the team was pretty good this year

5. Do you think Bill Snyder is one of the best collegiate coaches in the country, and do you think he will ever leave?

For the first part of that question my response is, "Is the Pope Catholic"? As for the second part, I really don't think he will ever

Why should he? He is with a program and community that absolutely loves him, and he has built a consistent program that year after year should be a top-25 team. He's not leaving unless the University of Iowa position opens up soon.

And, over the years, there have been many highs and lows: High - Being able to go down to Dallas to cover the Cotton Bowl. The spread they provided for the media there was incredible. It was some of the most fun I've had in my col-

Low — Seeing senior Kevin Lockett deal with that Cotton Bowl loss after the game. High - Dealing with K-State women's tennis coach Steve Bietau and covering the team for two years.

Over the years, Bietau became one of my favorite coaches to go talk to. His door was always open, and talks were not restricted to just tennis matches during the week. Truly, he is one of the better guys in the coaching busi-

Low - Having to watch the tennis team suffer through this season's 12-consecutive match losing streak.

High — The women's basketball season this year.

Low - The men's basketball season this High - Practicing and playing with the tennis team and doing a one-page story over it last semester. After a week of soreness and pain, I was glad I did the story. Low — The neverending sagas of my troubles with the Ford Tempo. I could write an epic novel about the Tempo problems. High — Asking a certain K-State women's basketball beat writer to come over and watch the Pittsburgh-Miami Monday Night Football game last November.

Three months ago, I was flat on my back in a hospital bed. I couldn't walk, talk, swallow and, in fact, couldn't even sit up. I was breathing by way of a ventilator and eating by way of a feeding tube in my stomach.

I had an eye patch over one eye because my eyes weren't tracking together. I had very little strength and coordination in my hands and arms. My husband tells me that I even socked him a couple of times when he came near my bed, and my arms flailed out involuntarily. I communicated by pointing to letters on an alphabet board to make words.

face was numb and mostly paralyzed. It was to the point where my eyes weren't tracking. I saw everything double - hence, the need for the eye patch.

Then, my hands and legs became numb and began to tingle. The numbness moved up my body, first requiring that I be catheterized, then requiring a feeding tube in my nose for nourishment and finally intubation to breathe.

I was scared. The doctors didn't seem to know what name to put on this needing labels; without them, we don't know how to react.

The Manhattan doctors decided to transfer me to Kansas City. If I had Guillian-Barre syndrome, St. Luke's could provide the plasmapheresis necessary to clean my blood. My

I also lost all sense of control; I couldn't even sign consent forms. I've never felt so out of control of my own destiny. Even after all the tests, though, there was still no definitive label for my affliction.

Although the doctors thought it might be related to multiple sclerosis. they wouldn't put that name on it. What they finally came up with for the charts was idiopathic encephalomyelitis, which just means that nerves were being demyelinated in my brain stem and spinal cord for some unknown reason.

The MRIs showed lesions in those areas; what happened as best as the doctors can tell is that my body's

The Earth split apart at the seams, fusing the elements into molten rock that eventually cooled.

And then there was humor! That is perhaps the easiest explanation for Jan Neal and Anthony Tovell's dual master's of fine arts show in the Union art gallery until May 16. Again, ► The exhibit. two artists, one dealing with an intangible spirituality (this time cynical) and the other with the physical are thrown together in exhibition. And, once gain, it makes sense.

Tovell's whimsical work is the funniest and most provocative two-dimensional work to be exhibited anywhere on campus this year. And it's not so concerned with shocking as it is with just being - in this case, ridiculous montages of religious, mythological and popular culture iconography.

Where else can one find Big Bird in bed with Leda? Or a muscular, biblical Jacob wrestling an angel in a manner best suited to the USA Network? The juxtaposition of the timelessly classical and the currently popular induces gig-gles of the refreshing sort rarely experienced on this campus.

"I know more about Big Bird and Fonzie than I do about Leda," Tovell admits. "These things don't really make sense to me, anyway. This is how I feel about mythology — it's outlived its use-

By far, Tovell's most original and fantastic creation is the triptych "Faith Accelerator," oil on Masonite, a witty exposé of organized religion satirizing the traditional art historical theme of the adoration of the magi.

The colorfully composed work features shepherds (both Cybill and Sam), downfallen televangelists Jim Bakker and Tammy Faye Moesner, and a more traditional Virgin Mary smoking a cigarette with a television replacing the sleeping Jesus in her arms. The adoration of the magi is a traditional theme, and everyone is aware of it," Tovell said. "It becomes almost iconographic. It gives me something to Another traditional depiction, a head portrait of a mature Jesus, is tweaked with the addition of a third eye bringing together both Christian iconography and an MFA show featuring "I'm not trying to be elitist. Honestly, an idea will hit me, and I just feel compelled to work it out," Tovell said. "I don't gauge in the Union art gallery the audience.'

Jan Neal's work couldn't differ more, as it rejects witty cultural references for a focus on the processes of the Earth. According to Neal's thesis statement, her ceramics are her attempts at reversing the process of the formation "I'm sort of an ad lib potter," Neal said. "I start with the clay and sort of become friends with it, and then we work together, but I want to do something it won't let me do. I just let the clay work for me, and we are the best of friends. It very seldom lets me down."

Neal makes her own glazes using various ashes - wood, pine needle, cigarette, grass and citrus - which create organic colors of brown, green, beige and black.

This ambiguous process achieves random results.

"Around the Bend," a scaly, bulging urn seems almost drizzled in gleaming chocolate. "Cinderella's Coach II," a swirling, asymmetrical teapot, dazzles in a subtly elegant white. A large urn, "Round Back II," Neal's first hand-built piece in the exhibition, cracks and bends appearing like a deflated ceramic, if that were possible.

"I don't draw the form," Neal said. "I let the clay move. The form just comes out of the clay. It's not something planned."

It might be cliché, but there is truly something for everyone in this rich show both the sarcastic and the sublime.

Fire damages house, injures local resident

Fire gutted a house on Osage Street late Monday evening, but no one died.

The fire at 526 Osage St., caused significant damage to the residence, but fire department officials were not yet sure of the amount of the loss.

Rick Berry, battalion chief for the Manhattan Fire Department, said the department would not have the figures for the amount of the loss until officials had finished examining the structure.

He said their initial report showed the fire started with a barbecue grill on the front porch of the residence.

An occupant of the house was grilling, and the fire got out of control.

No one was seriously injured. One occupant suffered burns to his leg, and one of the cats inside the residence died.

Berry said the fire had only been burning for a matter of minutes before the firefighters arrived at the scene.

There was a lot of damage and much of that was structural damage, he said.

The house was between the Korean Church of Manhattan and the Sunglow Mansion apartments.

A well-balanced diet is essential for good physical and mental health

Finals week brings new meaning to the cliche "food

The intake of food and nutrient supplements is under constant scientific and professional scrutiny. The results of this scrutiny hint that a correlation between brain activity and this intake exist.

'Eat a balanced meal before taking a final," said Janette Gehler, registered dietitian at Lafene Health Center. "When you're hungry, that's all you think about.

When you eat, you can concentrate.' A balanced meal consists of carbohydrates from grains or pastas, protein from meat or dairy products, fruits and vegetables and a little fat, Gehler said

Gehler said she suggests planning a finals week menu complete with study snacks to avoid binging.

A vegetable tray with dip or light microwave popcorn work well as snacks. "Crunchy foods tend to be more satisfying," she said.

Replace soft drinks with tea for a boost without extra empty calories.

So why not a fast-food value meal?

"High-fat meals just sit in the stomach longer and can cause indigestion," Gehler said."It may make you feel more sluggish, like you need to take a nap.'

Margaret Mall, registered dictitian in Riley, said she questioned the correlation between food and brain activ-

"They come in all types of forms," she said, "capsules, sprays, drinks, everything.

She said vitamin B-12 helps sharp thinking and memory by protecting the fatty sheath surrounding nerve fibers. The main sources come from animals in the form of meat, eggs and dairy.

"We sell a spray form of B-12 that really gives you a boost," Anderson said. The spray works well for those with late-night shifts and could help with late studying.

Ginseng, an ancient oriental herb, is a natural stimulant that can be used for taxing tasks such as examinations, Dr. Stephen Fulder, doctor of pharmacology and gerontologist, said.

Ginseng is technically defined as an adaptogen - a substance positively increasing the body's tolerance of stress. It can also be used in place of caffeine drinks, Anderson said.

"You can find ginseng drinks in flavors like cola, orange, grape, lemon-lime and root beer," she said. "You get away from negative effects of caffeine.'

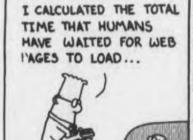

Ginkgo biloba, another oriental herb, aids the use of oxygen by brain cells by enhancing circulation. The connection between the bloodstream and mental function suggest better mental clarity, according to the company

With the glut of sexually suggestive photography in advertising and in galleries, it's easy to forget how good portrait photography can be subtly provocative and interesting

The portrait work of Laurence Blaker, who died in 1983, is chronicled in a revived 1984 exhibition at Commerce Bank until May 31.

To the students and faculty of K-State, Blaker is perhaps best known for his association with the Studio Royal portrait studio that shoots for the Royal Purple yearbook.

However, his career, which is laid out in this show chronologically, runs the gamut from soulful portraits of common folk to his military portraits of generals to artier fare. And throughout the exhibition, Blaker is shown to have been at the forefront of portrait photography - a man dedicated to his profession and willing to take it to new places.

The subjects couldn't be more diverse: a German prisoner of war to abstract nudes, done in a solarization technique that adds a silver glimmer touch; to political figures to artists.

A stern, energetic young Bob Dole, from 1968, sits just paces from a whimsical, Ed Wynne-esque portrait of R.D. Bradstreet (a past local jeweler) called "The Old Clockmaker." Further along, local glassblower Mitsugi Ohno is caught in the process while a spirited "Alice, Taos Potter" sits

The first shift comes with his involvement in a photography company in World War II. Blaker, charged with the portraits of the major generals in the European Theater of Operations, exhibits an eye of detail with light that gives the generals a commanding presence, if a striking lack of humanity.

After some artistic experimentation after the war. Blaker reinvents himself toward the end of his career (mid-1960s until 1975) as a soul-searching portrait photographer able to capture the subtle details of his subjects.

Perhaps the work would be easier studied under better lighting; the bank's ambient lighting system creates a disturbing glare pattern. Then again, this is a bank, not a gallery

Richard Hendricks, senior in computer engineering, said he enjoys Rappoport as his Lifespan teacher.

"I like the way he talks," he said. "He's a lot more casual, rather than just formal.

About 20 years ago, Rappoport became interested in Zen Buddhism about the same time as a friend in the K-State mathematics department. "I was interested in the meditation, from a perspective of psychology and he was interested in how Zen could help math creativity," he said.

"We heard about a master from California who was giving a workshop in Boulder, at a center for Eastern philosophy. So we went.

"I was very impressed - what he was saying could have been straight out of the books, he was so good. One thing led to another, and we started regular practices.

Rappoport and a few other local friends heard of another Zen teacher in Minnesota. They eventually managed to bring him to Manhattan to help organize their group, which now meets three times a week on average for Zen sessions, he

"When my kids were 12 years old, they would ask me why I did this," he said. "The simple answer is that it's like mental weight lifting - to strengthen and discipline the mind. It improves con-

Rappoport appreciates the intensity of Zen meditation, which he said can also be described as though thoughts were water being purified.

One week out of every year, his group will take a retreat into the country for a change of scenery where they meditate,

Bob Sinnett, a psychologist with Mental Health Associates in Manhattan, practices Zen with Rappoport and has worked with him on research projects in the past. "I think he's got a remarkable breadth of interests," he said. "He's stimulated a lot of his friends and students and colleagues. Sinnett said Rappoport has been able to bring in a lot of useful perspective to the field of psychology from European and Far Eastern sources.

"He's still open to newer kinds of ideas, though," he said. "We're in a situation where we can be blunt and confront one another when we need to. You don't often get to give that kind of criticism to others."

For 10 years, Rappoport worked with history professor George Kren on a book, "The Holocaust and the Crisis of Human Behavior," one of few such books which deals with Third Reich society as a whole, not limiting itself to one type of people.

"Its aim is to look at some of the more basic sources of what made the Holocaust possible." Kren said. "It's a historical analysis of science and its relationship to the Holocaust, and of the people - the method of thinking, the way we categorize people, the ways in which it is possible for people to commit atrocities, and also how people could allow themselves to be victimized.'

Kren joined the K-State history faculty only a few years before Rappoport signed on, and the two have been friends the whole time

"I taught him how to ride a motorcycle," Kren said. "Which he did very well, I should say."

Rappoport, who said he always has two or three projects going on, is now studying human behavior in regards to food, including eating habits and prefer-

He said he finds the phenomenon of people as a rule preferring unhealthy food to healthy food interesting.

He once told his class just how much he enjoys his role as a university instructor, beyond just a means to pay bills.

"I like being an instructor, about as much as I like riding a Harley-Davidson." He paused, then added, "- on a

"I might wipe out in front of all these people, or on the highway.

His sons, now living in New York and Washington, D.C., tell him about the huge groups of people in their respective cities made up of former Kansas resiimmune system attacked its own nerve cell sheaths, interrupting the communication between my brain and my muscles and senses. The process was probably triggered by a minor virus infection I had at Christmas.

"There's a whole nest of people in Brooklyn like this," he said. "Being from Kansas is important.

The treatment was massive doses of steroids, which have their own potential for destruction as well.

After four weeks in Kansas City, I had my second ambulance ride, this time to the Kansas Rehabilitation Hospital in Topeka, where I spent six weeks for intensive occupational and physical therapy. The people there were both tough and tender; tough in making me do things I thought I couldn't do and tender in their obvious caring attitude.

I came home April 9 — home where I have a devoted husband and two beautiful daughters. My husband, Art, visited me almost every day while I was hospitalized, and he helped others cope by keeping them informed with daily email updates and "bad jokes of the day." His positive attitude and daily doses of laughter definitely helped me get better.

And, support from other family members, especially my sister, who traveled from Bolivia to be with me for three weeks and my parents, who spent nine weeks off and on at our house caring for our children, kept me going. My mother-in-law has spent most of April and part of May here, and my first husband's mother will spend part of May as well.

I am also so very grateful to all the doctors and other health care providers who treated me with dignity and tender loving care, and to all the many people who showered me with cards, letters, flowers and e-mail messages the last few months.

My latest MRI, done about four weeks ago, shows healing of the lesions. The doctors are unwilling to say whether the healing will continue or whether this illness is a one-time occurrence.

I have come a long way, but I have a way to go yet. My hands, face and feet still tingle, my legs feel like they have lead weights in them, and the hearing in my left ear isn't the best. But I can walk and type and smell the spring earth and hold my husband's hand and watch my daughters play — and even get a kick out of them bickering.

I'll never again take for granted the seemingly simple way my fingers and legs and ears work. I had a major wake-up call — one I wouldn't have chosen for myself or anyone else, but one that year, it is possible to see slight changes in light that ultimately change the effect of the image — from dramatic to romantic to glamourous. It's a legacy that Laurence Blaker has left for us to enjoy and, ultimately, reflect.

Drill sergeant sentenced to 25 years for raping trainees

Opinion .

ABERDEEN PROVING GROUND, Md. -An Army drill sergeant who faced life in prison for raping six trainees was sentenced Tuesday to 25 years in a case that led to investigations of sexual misconduct at U.S. military bases

Staff Sgt. Delmar G. Simpson stood calmly to hear his sentence and hugged his mother, Edna, after it was imposed. He left the courtroom with his arm around his wife's shoulders.

His attorney, Frank J. Spinner, said he will appeal the sentence in the case, which has rekindled debate about whether the Army should continue to mix men and women in basic Simpson's defense team blamed the verdict on false claims by the female trainees - saying the sex was consensual - and undue influence by top Army commanders. They also suggested racial bias played a role, although race was barely mentioned during the court-martial.

"If you're an African American drill sergeant in the Army, you're an endangered species," Spinner said. "If you're an African American drill sergeant, any woman who you go behind closed doors with can turn into a rape claim."

Simpson is black and most of his accusers are white. Most of the drill sergeants at Aberdeen, 30 miles northeast of Baltimore, are black, as are 11 other staff members charged with sexual miscon-

The jury of two black men, three white men and one white woman convicted Simpson a week ago and took about 2-1/2 hours to reach a decision on his sentence for 18 counts of rape and 29 other offenses, mostly other forms of sexual summer money in Currency.

The jury also ordered Simpson dishonorably discharged at the reduced rank of private, forfeiting all pay and pension benefits.

Maj. Gen. John E. Longhouser, commander of Aberdeen Proving Ground where Simpson worked, must approve the sentence. He might reduce it but not add to it. The sentence also will be automatically reviewed by the U.S. Army Court of Criminal Appeals.

Some women's advocates considered the sentence lenient

"If he were a civilian, he would not be sentenced to 25 years. He would be considered a serial rapist and would receive life in prison," said retired Air Force Lt. Col. Karen Johnson, vice president of the National Organization for Women.

Others said the verdict sent a message that the military won't tolerate sexual misconduct. "This should be a flare in the night," said Lt.

Col. Gabriel Riesco, chief of staff for the school at Aberdeen. "Those sergeants and instructors out there trolling instead of training should think twice."

The case prompted investigations into sexual misconduct at U.S. military bases worldwide. A sexual harassment hot line set up by the Army last November received more than 1,243 complaints

Of those, 325 complaints have resulted in ongoing criminal investigations, 498 have been closed, 310 were referred to other Army agencies because they didn't involve criminal allegations and 110 were in the preliminary investigative

At a congressional hearing in February, Army Secretary Togo West also defended continuing the Army's practice of mixed-gender training, begun in 1974, telling senators that the solution to sexual harassment cases is not to stop training women with men.

Simpson's sentence also covered five lesser charges to which he had already pleaded guilty. He could be eligible for clemency in five years and eligible for parole after serving one-third of the sentence, or eight years and four months. He

Dispute settled about Union art gallery schedule

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

For the second time this semester, controversy surrounds decisions made concerning the Union art gallery.

Although the gallery itself is not in danger of being axed, the schedule of programming — set by the Union Program Council in partnership with the Department of Art - for next fall has been called into question by the art

In a meeting with UPC Tuesday morning, Jim Munce, chair of the art department's exhibitions committee, discovered that UPC's tentative gallery schedule left only a few weeks open for art department programming He then informed Anna Holcombe, head of the art department.

"We're just in a tizzy," Holcombe said in an interview before lunch

Holcombe said no one from UPC had informed the art department about changes in the schedule. She said Munce, who coordinates art department plans with UPC for the gallery, met with UPC and the changes were

"After all that struggle to keep the gallery, we find we have just one show over the Thanksgiving break," Holcombe said. "Why did we spend all that energy - we were even fighting for UPC shows. We were fighting for them, and then they stabbed us in the

"We usually have a good relationship, as far as sharing the gallery," Holcombe said. "Who's in authority here? Who's making the decisions without letting us know?"

In an interview during the lunch hour, Munce described the situation as bizarre.

"It's just crazy." he said. "I go on the understanding that I'm going to have three shows one semester and four the

As chair of the Art Department Exhibitions Committee, Munce is faced with finding a home for master's of fine arts and visiting artist exhibitions. He has scheduled for fall semester a University of Missouri faculty show, a K-State faculty sabbatical show and the usual MFA shows.

"They said they were given more money, so they scheduled more shows," Munce said. "I thought that was a crappy answer. That's not a reason."

A hasty 2 p.m. meeting between Munce and UPC turned out to be a total reversal of events.

ansas' state motto, "Ad Astra Per by donating $1,000 to the project. Aspera" or "To the Stars Through Difficulties," about sums up Salina sculptor Richard Bergen's struggle to place his sculpture of a Native American on the Capitol dome in Topeka.

When state leaders talk about Bergen, most often one word comes to mind: perseverance.

For nearly a decade, Bergen has waited to finish the 20-foot, male figure sculpture and see it installed. Politics kept the project from gaining public financing for years after he won a national competition in 1988.

Bergen's sculpture, "Ad Astra," portrays a young Native American male aiming his bow and arrow toward the firmament. For now, the sculpture exists as drawings and smaller versions that are sold to benefit the project.

In early March, Salina native Gov. Bill Graves opened a $1 million fundraising drive

The $1 million goes to increase the structural support inside the dome for the sculpture, the sculpture itself, and to install a smaller rendition of the sculpture in a new donor plaza on the Capitol grounds.

The artist's inspiration

In Bergen's downtown Salina studio, decades of sculpture randomly sit low to the ground, as if wavering under the bow of a large study of "Ad Astra."

Here, Bergen does just about everything: framing, gun cleaning, painting restoration and his sculpture. It's like a neighborhood sculpture - if such a thing existed - where folk ramble in and out and stories are endlessly recounted in revelries of nostalgia.

"You look at the whole world, and you won't find anybody doing a capitol dome sculpture," Bergen said. "We're kind of in a time warp. This should have been done 100 years ago.

The original capitol dome plan called for a sculpture of the Greek fertility goddess Ceres, but the legislature balked at her "mythological morals" as reason enough to dismiss it.

Bergen won the commission from a Kansas Arts Commission competition in 1988 but soon realized the money didn't exist for the project.

"These guys didn't have any money, but I thought, "What the heck, let's go ahead and enter," Bergen said. "I didn't know what to put up on that dome. I'd been driving by the capitol building for years saying, 'Gosh, they need something up there.' I could never come up with something good."

Until, at least, Bergen visited the KAC

CES is transferring the professional profiles now registered to a new system, Tracey Fraser, director of CES, said. The new format will allow students to register and update through the CES World Wide Web page, eliminating the need to go to Holtz Hall.

Students who are now registered can still access their information until June 1, but they cannot modify it. After June Fraser said, any modifications of information will be made on the new

This new online registration will allow CES to meet the needs of offcampus students, such as those doing student teaching, Fraser said.

The new format of the system will be a résumé-style document, not the current professional profile. This format will add a greater sense of individuality when students are marketing themselves, Fraser said.

Merging of the two current systems, the one containing teaching and education-focused students and the noneducation system, will aid in employerrequested searches for students with majors interested in both teaching and non-teaching positions.

The benefits from this will be twofold, by helping students and employers fulfill their needs, Fraser said.

Another modification to the system will be a restructuring of Jobline, the online job listings section of the CES web page. Access to Jobline is gained once students have registered with CES and received a PIN number.

The current system requires CES to do the searches, compile the lists of professional profiles and either mail or fax them to the employers.

The change in systems was prompted by the advance of technology by current recruiters, Fraser said.

SISTER SAYS MCVEIGH WARNED SOMETHING BIG WOULD HAPPEN.

DENVER — Timothy McVeigh left a computer message warning that federal agents would swing in the wind one day and wrote his sister just weeks before the Oklahoma bombing that "something big is going to happen," she testified Tuesday

Jennifer McVeigh told jurors she followed her brother's instructions to burn his letter, which she said predicted the event would occur "in the month of the bull," an astrological reference to either April or May.

"Did he ever tell you what that something was?" asked prosecutor Beth Wilkinson.

"No," Jennifer McVeigh replied.
"And you never asked?"
"No."

On April 19, 1995, a truck bomb exploded outside the downtown Oklahoma City federal building, killing 168 people and injuring more than 500 in the deadliest act of terrorism on U.S.

After she heard about her brother's arrest two days after the blast, Jennifer McVeigh said she burned clippings he had given her from "The Turner Diaries," a racist novel that prosecutors say was a blueprint for the bombing.

"Why did you burn them?" Wilkinson asked.

"I was scared," said Jennifer McVeigh, who has acknowledged she shared some of her brother's anti-govern-

Testifying under immunity for 2-1/2 hours over two days, Jennifer McVeigh generally spoke in calm, even tones. She entered the courtroom smiling broadly at her brother, and mouthed the words, "Good morning." He smiled back.

But the demeanor of the 23-year-old college student changed dramatically when she spoke about her intense eight-day interrogation by FBI agents, who told her she could face the death penalty if she didn't cooperate. Her voice cracked and she began crying into a white tissue.

1 DEAD, ANOTHER UNCONSCIOUS IN APPARENT SUICIDE IMITATION.

ENCINITAS, Calif. — One person was found dead and another unconscious Tuesday at a Holiday Inn in what authorities said appeared to be an attempt to imitate the Heaven's Gate mass suicide.

San Diego County Sheriff's spokesman Don Crist said the body and the unconscious person were found by deputies at about 12:25 p.m. The unconscious person was taken to a hospital.

Crist said both might have been former members of the Heaven's Gate cult, and one was the husband of a cult member who participated in the March 26 mass suicide in a Rancho Santa Fe man-

The hotel is about four miles from the mansion.

Thirty-nine members of the cult killed themselves believing their deaths would enable them to catch a spaceship trailing the Hale-Bopp comet.

CNN reported Tuesday that it received what appeared to be a suicide tape, including a so-called exit statement from both men.

"I would like everyone to understand that I simply cannot stay here any longer, and I am leaving because it is time for me to leave," one man said in a letter accompanying the tape, according to CNN.

POST-FLOOD PLAN MIGHT MOVE HUNDREDS OF HOMES, BUSINESSES.

GRAND FORKS, N.D. — Some of the residents routed by the Red River flooding might never go home: City engineers are recommending giving the river more room by demolishing some flooded homes and businesses and relocating more than 1,000 people.

A preliminary plan presented to the city council Monday night would widen and realign the river channel between Grand Forks and East Grand Forks, Minn., city public works director Ken Vein said.

Death penalty sought for drunken driver in landmark case

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — A prosecutor urged a jury Tuesday to condemn a drunken driver to death for killing two college students with his car, marking the first time that the death penalty has been sought in such a case.

Thomas Richard Jones was playing Russian roulette when he got behind the wheel after drinking beer and taking painkillers — but in this game, the gun was pointed at someone else, prosecutor Vincent Rabil said.

"You point it at someone and pull the trigger, and you don't know if it's going to go off or not," he said.

Jones, 40, was convicted of murder Friday in the deaths of two young women who were passengers in a car hit by his truck Sept. 4. Four others in the car were injured.

It is apparently the first case in the nation in which prosecutors have pushed for the death penalty in a driving-while-impaired case. Prosecutors won murder convictions in similar trials in Washington state in 1996 and California in 1995, but they all declined to seek the death penalty.

Jones' defense lawyer blamed Satan — in the form of alcohol and drugs — for Jones' problems, while Jones blamed the government. On the stand, Jones testified his addiction was worsened by Veterans Affairs doctors who gave him more drugs when he sought help last August.

"Satan forced him to do it.
Beelzebub. Alcohol ... in every bottle of liquor, the devil lurks. In these pain pills he was taking, the devil lurks," defense lawyer Carol Teeter said in his closing

"All I'm asking you folks to do is to not complete the job of his destruction. Let's let God do that. Let's give him a chance to live. It's not going to be an enjoyable life," Teeter said.

Deliberations began in the afternoon. If the panel votes for the death penalty, Jones would have a choice of gas or lethal injection. The judge must abide by the jury's decision.

Under North Carolina state law, anyone who kills another while committing a separate dangerous felony can be prosecuted for first-degree murder—punishable by the death penalty—whether the death was intentional or not. Prosecutors said Jones committed two felonies — reckless driving while impaired and assault with a deadly wearon.

During a sentencing hearing Monday, a Wake Forest University official read the college admission applications of the victims — Maia Witzl, 19, of Arlington, Texas, and Julie Hansen, 19, of Rockville, Md. The university is in Winston-Salem.

Witzl, a volunteer drug counselor in her hometown, wrote in her application that she wanted to help make the world a better place. In his closing argument Tuesday morning, Rabil reflected on Witzl's wishes:

"What good is going to come out of this unless he is convicted of firstdegree murder and receives the ultimate penalty? That is the good that is going to come out of this."

Yet, outside the courtroom, Witzl's parents said they favored a sentence of life in prison.

"An eye for an eye, that's not what Maia was about," Joy Witzl said. "My wife and I are in sort of a prison and will be for the rest of our natural lives, and we feel Mr. Jones should be, too," Bob Witzl said.

During his testimony Monday, Jones wept as he described how his pickup crossed the median and struck the students' car while he was trying to insert a country music tape into his stereo.

Jones said he had been battling problems with prescription drugs and alcohol since 1980, when his left leg was amputated after an accident on a riding lawn mower.

He said Veterans Affairs doctors never warned him against taking his painkillers with alcohol.

On the day of the accident, he said, he took drugs and drank two quarts of beer, then went to two bars and drank more beer.

Jones had two prior convictions for driving while impaired and had a third charge pending at the time of the fatal

He also had other run-ins with the law, including several other traffic accidents and charges of assaulting his wife and his mother, soliciting an undercover vice officer for sex, shoplifting and stealing prescription pads.

Diet-drug cocktail fen-phen faces increased scrutiny

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The death of a Massachusetts woman who took diet drugs to fit into her wedding dress has increased scrutiny of an unapproved but widely used drug cocktail known as fen-phen.

Before Mary Linnen of Quincy, Mass., died in February from a heart and lung disorder, drug maker Wyeth-Ayerst Laboratories Inc. warned doctors that taking its appetite suppressant, fenfluramine, with the competing phentermine is not recommended.

The Food and Drug Administration has never approved the combination, but doctors remain free to prescribe the two drugs together — 7 million times last year.

The combination, banned in Sweden, is popular at weight loss centers such as Nutri/System, whose doctors wrote several thousand fen-phen prescriptions last year, company spokesman Joseph DiBartolomeo said

Debate about the combination was rekindled when Linnen's family filed a lawsuit Monday against the drug makers, a Walgreen's pharmacy and the doctor who prescribed it. "Instead of walking down the aisle before a bride, I walked behind a casket," said Mary Jo Linnen, mother of the 30-year-old woman, who was 5-feet-6 and weighed 185 to 195 pounds.

Studies show the drugs taken separately cause primary pulmonary hypertension, an elevated blood pressure of the lungs that can cause the heart to fail the official cause of Linnen's death.

But because the drugs were not meant to be taken together, there is no authoritative research to gauge the risk of taking fen-phen.

"There's no question that fen-phen produces primary pulmonary hypertension," said Dr. Lewis Rubin, director of pulmonary and critical care at the University of Maryland Medical System in Baltimore. "There is no question that either drug alone can produce pulmonary hypertension. What we don't know at this point in time is the magnitude of the risk of taking the drugs together."

Rubin, who advised Linnen's family on her health in late 1996, co-wrote a New England Journal of Medicine study on the link between PPH and appetite suppression. The study, conducted in Europe, found a 23-fold increase in the risk of PPH among those who took appetite suppressants, including fenfluramine.

The study did not examine the fen-phen combination.

Rubin and researchers at 15 medical centers are trying to persuade manufacturers, including Wyeth-Ayerst, to study the effects of fen-phen, Rubin said.

Wyeth-Ayerst spokeswoman Audrey Ashby said the company had not seen the lawsuit and would not comment on it.

Because the fen-phen combination is not approved, the company does not recommend it, she said.

The Linnens' lawsuit against the company also names phentermine maker Medeva Pharmaceuticals Inc. of London, pharmacy owner Walgreen Co. of Deerfield, Ill., and Dr. Abby Landzberg of Weymouth, Mass., who prescribed the drug. Landzberg wouldn't comment, and Medeva did not return calls Tuesday.

Despite increased scrutiny, fen-phen has a substantial cadre of supporters.

"We've seen very few if any side effects," Nutri/System's DiBartolomeo said. "I think the history shows the drugs are very safe considering they've been on the market for over 24 years now."

 CROSSING SIGNAL NEEDED AT MANHATTAN AVE., THURSTON Editor,

I am writing to you concerning the crosswalk on north Manhattan Avenue and Thurston Street. There needs to be a crossing signal there so it will be less dangerous.

There are about 12,000 cars that travel N. Manhattan Avenue in a 24-hour period, according to the last full traffic count done by the city of Manhattan. In a count I did of how many people use the crosswalk in an average school day, there were 882 students who crossed that day. With the weather getting warmer, that number is sure to

There have been accidents and near misses at this crosswalk because there is no signal requiring traffic to stop for pedestrians.

'I am aware that there is a proposal to install a light at this crosswalk, but it is not scheduled to go in until 2002.

I am appreciative that they see the need for a signal, but I feel this is too far away, and more accidents could occur while waiting to put a signal up. I hope this letter encourages them to move the date from 2002 to 1998.

The winds blow wild in the cultural wasteland of Manhattan

RUSSELL FORTMEYER is a senior in architectural engineering. You

Finding a fitting conclusion to a year's worth of odd, abstract and sometimes outthere-columns is a daunting

Perhaps I've made it even more difficult, considering the outrageously varied subject matter I've chosen to discuss. Whether it be architecture, art, politics (both professional and amateur) or just plain insanity, surely there must be a point to this cynic,

To be honest, this has been a terrible year locally for nearly all aforementioned subjects, save art with the opening of the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art. Manhattan, sad to say, lives in a state of denial.

At the much-heralded opening of Brent Bowman's new air terminal west of town, President Jon Wefald announced in his usual way of over-trumping even the most insignificant aspect - Manhattan was one of the most "progressive" cities in the United States. Apparently, he forgot to mention "that is, relative to Ogden."

Is this really flat-out denial or a sincere appreciation for the second-rate? Not to suggest Manhattan doesn't have its share of the avant garde intellectual crowd, however silent, but can we be expected to believe K-State is a progressive campus?

Nearly every symposium and important speaker visiting campus this year was sparsely attended. Students and faculty, more than ever, have stayed away from the public presentation of new ideas.

Student government elections have begun to endlessly repeat themselves in an attempt at relevance, slowly whittling away the final lump of respect for any elected campus

Local state office elections have turned to pettiness and bitterness, with a frightening spell of age discrimination toward younger candidates. We've also learned it helps to be a celebrity as even minor past athletic status surely overshadows any intellectual deficiencies for national office.

We've seen the end of large, non-country musical acts in town, but a surprising revival of club music in a renewed

At the same time, professional theater has been reduced to minor celebrity attractions and misguided literary stagings. The only arts movie theater in Manhattan shut its doors, moving its function to the metroplex where showings are brief and drowned by other movies.

Campus arts movies have been spotty, with many times featuring year-old movies that have either shown in Manhattan before or are on video.

Campus theater, which still suffers from poor student support, continues to fascinate, however relying on smaller pools of talent. Student art has been resurrected from irrelevance, but has fought for exposure on a campus full of apathetic administrators and students who sit idly by while galleries face closure.

Our art museum has single-handedly raised the profile of art in town by opening new avenues of discussion. The first year has been bumpy, as the staff have tried out new programming, but has proved promising for a riskier sec-

Campus architecture shows no immediate signs of life. The "world-class" art museum building (again, trumps the prez) remains the most confusing structure in town still soliciting "Is it done, yet?" comments from visitors.

The hulking fibrary expansion rises in mid-campus mocking those of us who have moved past 1900 collegiate gothic architecture. The K-State Student Union design sketches promise a commercially oriented, purchasefriendly environment, scrapping the cozy chumminess that makes the current building a success.

It's as if a large majority of cultural life in Manhattan has been squeezed of vitality, of meaning and compassion. We locals come to the trough of marginal cultural goodies and leave ambiguously contented to know we've partaken of a "world-class" attraction.

The only bright spots in this vast cultural desert are those few events coordinated, curated, designed and composed by the fewest individuals. If Manhattan culture has given us one lesson this year, it is this: the more interests involved, the less outstanding the results

Next year, we must cast off committee-architecture, marketing-based-campaigns and "safe" public events. Our cultural leaders have the opportunity to shape generations and, yet, many of them and their patrons are satisfied with a deafening status quo.

different custodial agreements, but that is what it boils down to. One parent is a parent all the time, and one parent gets to be a parent on alternating weekends and various holidays, maybe for the summer.

I have heard horror stories of battling parents who used their children as pawns in a game of revenge. Some of my friends moved after their parents divorced and hardly saw the part-time parent. It seems sometimes divorce turns parents into children, throwing fits and being selfish.

There are exceptions to the harsh stories. There are parents who make it work. Children who grew up feeling blessed for having had parents that love them and step-parents who cared.

But those are the exceptions. Very few people I know had positive experiences after their parents divorced. It's so sad. Divorce is not a positive thing. I'm not going to lie and sugarcoat the situation. If there were any other way, I would have stayed married. We did what we had to do. Splitting up our family wasn't easy for us, and we knew it wouldn't be easy for the . boys. But early on, we decided to make it as smooth as possible. This divorce was not their fault, and they weren't going to suffer.

The custody division of my boys happened a little more than a year ago and went as smoothly as could be expect-

Unlike when my parents divorced, the boys' father and I get along better now than we did when we were married. We talk to each other like human beings, go to school conferences together and celebrate the boys' birthdays together at a party at my apartment. I still see my boys all the time. As a matter of fact, I see them every morning and two evenings a week, and they spend the night on Fridays. I've missed them, though. There's something different about being there every night to tuck them into bed, hearing about the day's adventures over dinner or scaring away the bed bugs and dust bunnies under the bed.

There are a few advantages to being the part-time parent. I had one weekend night and two weekday nights when wasn't a parent. During that time I could be spontaneous. could stay out late without a babysitter. I could sleep in late, I could watch what I wanted on television. Things a normal parent only dreams of doing.

Now, with little more than a week's notice, I am going to be the full-time parent again. The boys' father is in the military, and duty has called. He isn't going to some far-off land to fight a war, just to Alabama to go to school for 5-1/2 months.

So it's back to being a full-time mom. No more McDonald's Happy Meals every night the boys are with me. No more staying up to watch Cartoon Planet on Cartoon Network every night the boys are with me. I have to be the bad cop sometimes.

It will be OK get to tuck them in and read to them every night before bed, and I'll have to brush up on my bedbug-fight-

Hedrick said he has a violence connection in his family background.

"In a sense I'm going back to my great-grandfather's territory," he said. "He was Polish and German and became a Russian Cossack.'

He said he's always been fascinated with Central Europe, Eastern Europe and East Germany. He attended a university in Bonn, Germany, for one year as an undergraduate.

In spring 1968, Hedrick helped a stu-

He and his family are still trying to work out the financial and job arrangements for the trip. His two children from the University of Kansas want to go to Prague with him.

programming, coordinated the meeting to resolve the situation.

"It was a miscommunication on everyone's part," Vering said. "It was all worked out, and we will further communicate as the year goes on.

Vering said the schedule had only been tentative, so they were able to revise it in order to establish a 50-50 balance of UPC and art department programming.

"Nothing in our schedule has changed from what we had planned originally," Vering said. "We did some adjusting. We made a compromise, and both parties are very content with how we have ended it."

In a telephone interview after the meeting, Munce was in good spirits about the scheduling conflict resolution.

"We took the whole schedule apart and put it back together again," Munce said. "I think it's going to work out good for both."

With the revised schedule, Munce said there will be room for the three art department shows planned for the fall.

"I'm just glad I got my head out of the water," Munce said.

Munce said many of the problems were due to scheduling that was delayed because no one knew if the gallery would survive as part of the expansion or if it would be closed because of construction.

Thus, the scheduling, which is usually taken care of in early March, was delayed until today. But what will keep this from happening again?

Mike Hodgson, president of UPC, said UPC is taking steps to prevent this from

'We will get in touch and communicate with the art department on a more regular basis to establish a better communication process, whatever that needs to be," Hodgson said.

Munce said he suggested either he or someone else from the art department attend the UPC Arts Committee meetings from the beginning

So the fuss about the gallery scheduled worked itself out in the course of a day. "Basically, everything worked out fine," Munce said.

In closing arguments, the prosecutor, Capt. David Thomas, asked for the maximum penalty of life in prison "to send a message, not only to him but to drill sergeants past and future that what he did will not be tolerated."

Defense attorney Capt. Edward Brady had asked the jury to sentence Simpson to no jail time, saying the panel had already sent a message of deterrence with its guilty verdicts. "The first step toward rehabilitating a broken, humbled, defeated man is compassion," Brady said.

He later told reporters the sentence and verdict were signals that mixedgender basic training should be reconsidered.

"It's not working. It's a catastrophe, and no one wants to say that," Brady said.

Pentagon spokesman Kenneth Bacon said Defense Secretary William Cohen has visited training bases and has heard the arguments that it makes sense to have mixed-gender training.

"The Army believes that they should train as they fight," Bacon said.

office and inquired if anyone had called with suggestions. The only people to suggest ideas were elementary school students.

Bergen was immediately interested because he was an art teacher for more than a decade in Salina public schools, dedicating a large share of his life to inspiring children's creative side. "I started going through them —

"I started going through them — meadowlarks, cottonwood trees, sunflowers — that wasn't going to work for the dome. But, I saw more and more Native Americans. There were so many that I decided that was going to be it," Bergen said.

"We've got to put an Indian up there because the only people who are interested in this are kids. And they picked an Indian, and that's what I'm going to do," he said.

Bergen's Native American sculpture is based on the model of a young male member of the Kansa Tribe, which was situated in and around the present-day Topeka area, in summer dress of a loin cloth crowned in a traditional Kansa mohawk of feathers.

It's a purely representational sculpture, although Bergen does foray into abstract works — his favorite style — as evident in the many models in his studio. He often gets comments likening his work to that of British sculptor Henry Moore, although Bergen refutes such suggestions.

"That's what I have a feel for," he said. "It gets to be where you have to conform to do what people expect. When you do something like this" — he pointed to a large, abstract reclining figure — "this, you can do whatever you want with the idea and they can like it or not.

"I would probably go a little more abstract if I thought I could sell them in this neighborhood."

Friends offer support

Sen. Ben Vidricksen, R-Salina and assistant majority leader, has known Bergen for more than 45 years, and his promotion of "Ad Astra" has been crucial in lining up more supporters.

"Dick is very dedicated to what he does," Vidricksen said. "He is probably one of the most well known artists of our time. He has really persevered to keep going even if he didn't know he would get his money."

Vidricksen, who has spent 18 years in the legislature, gave $500 to the cause and has been leading an effort to get more fundraisers involved.

more fundraisers involved.
"I believe in the project, and I believe in him," he said.

Vidricksen is also responsible for getting the legislative authority to install a fundraiser plaza on the capitol grounds with a smaller version of the sculpture and bricks commemorating those who donated $250 or more.

"This will be the No. 1 tourist attraction at the capitol," he said. "It will be good for all of us to have something on top of our capitol."

Howard Kessinger, editor and copublisher of the Marysville Advocate, knows Bergen from his experiences supporting the installation of the artist's "Pony Express" sculpture in Marysville.

'Pony Express' sculpture in Marysville. Kessinger describes the larger-than-life bronze rider as a "feeling of motion and movement. You look at it, and you feel a person is riding this horse."

Still an admirer of Bergen's work and a friend, Kessinger said Bergen excels as an artist because he goes beyond something you merely see to something you can feel.

"Things that Dick does have depth," Kessinger said. "He really has a feel for

The Pony Express Rider was dedicated on July 4, 1976, with a speech by then-Governor John Carlin. Kessinger said the sculpture was not well received until it was finally unveiled.

"The minute that sucker was up everyone was in love with it," he said. "It just has such great energy to it — everything I've seen of Dick's work has that extra quality that really great artists have."

Roots and branches in Kansas

Bergen came to Kansas from his home in New Jersey in 1948 to study art at Bethany College. He's stayed here ever since.

He holds a Master's of Arts from K-State and a doctorate in art education from the University of Kansas. K-State has turned into a family affair for Bergen.

Daughter Lori Bergen, after having received her journalism education from K-State, returned as a professor. Son Rich Bergen, a sculptor himself whose quasi-landmark jack sculpture stands in the garden near West Stadium, is a graduate student in art.

Lori Bergen remembers what it was like to grow up with Salina's No. 1 art teacher as a father.

"He instilled a neat sense of curiosity in kids about art," she said. "My friends, still today, remember that."

"We were always involved in projects

— we got in on everything he did," Lori Bergen said.

"The Benny and Smith salesman would come to the house, and we would get big boxes of fingerpaint, boxes of paper — I can't ever think of a time there weren't paper, crayons and paint around the house," she said.

And while art itself was integral to the Bergen household, so was a passion for Kansas.

"Kansas has probably defined my dad as an artist in many ways," Lori Bergen said. "There are incredible things here that you can't find anywhere

Richard Bergen easily agrees the capitol dome sculpture is the most important state commission to come along in decades.

"I don't want to sound corny, but I love Kansas for the wide-open spaces," he said. "In two minutes, I can be out on a road with no cars in sight. I can drive out on the road and see nothing."

In some ways, Kansas has held onto many of the same characteristics that existed when that young Kansa tribesman would have been roaming the prairie in search of buffalo.

"The fact the sculpture represents the people who occupied the territory for a lot longer time than we have occupied it, I thought it would be appropriate," Bergen said.

"It better be, if you're going to put something up there and immortalize it, because it will be there as long as the building," he said.

THE STORY OF A FIGHTER

MICHAEL KETTERL, junior in computer information systems, cheers on the men's basketball team after the Wildcats' win over the Oklahoma Sooners. The game broke a seven game losing streak at Bramlage Coliseum February 8. Michael, a dedicated K-State athletics fan, attended all the mens home games with his cousin and roommate Spencer Ketterl, freshman in animal sciences and industry.

his is the story of a life.

Fourteen months ago, Michael Ketterl, then a sophomore in computer information systems, was taking each day as it came.

Mornings were spent in class. In the evening, he played hard, often coaching others at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. A high school athlete and leader, Michael saw college as a chance to do even more.

A trip to Lafene Health Center changed his life. Doctors diagnosed him with a rare form of cancer.

Suddenly, nothing could be taken for granted.

In the months that followed, Michael lived every minute of his day to the fullest.

He never missed an opportunity to cheer on the Wildcats.

He made his parents proud. He made his friends laugh.

He touched every person he met.

Michael's life means something.

Late in April, Michael told his sister Melinda Ketterl to stay close.

"Even though my eyes are closed, I can still hear you," he said. "I am still here."

A CARD saying "Get Better Soon", sits atop of Michael's desk. The card was sent to him by youth from Lewis Elementary School hoping he would get better during his battle with malignant fibrous histiocytoma.

MICHAEL MAKES his way through the Bramlage Coliseum parking lot in his red Chevy 4x4 pickup truck looking for a close spot to park before the Oklahoma basketball game. "He doesn't want anyone to look at him as handicapped because he doesn't feel like he's handicapped," Melinda Ketterl, Michael's sister and a sophomore in human ecology, said. "He has a handicapped sticker, but won't use it unless it's absolutely necessary because he wants to leave it for someone who really needs it."

"Concern is fine, but when you're a fighter like

s the day darkens off a country road in Edwards County, Michael Ketterl moves to the porch of his grandfather's farmhouse.

He listens to cars turn off the quiet road onto the crunching gravel driveway as he reads the construction-paper cards sent from fourth- and fifth-graders at nearby Lewis Elementary School.

Michael rests his elbow on his knee and runs his hand through the dark hair that has grown thick during the semester. Tilting his head sideways, Michael reads one card after another.

"Happy 22nd birthday, Michael. Feel better soon," he reads.
"My favorite color is blue."
The last line tickles him. As his laugh gets louder, it stifles

The last line tickles him. As his laugh gets louder, it stifles quietly before turning into a cough. Michael pushes back his shoulder and contracts his scarred chest to take in a breath.

The breath is shallow and deliberate. Friends and family on the porch grow quiet

His eyes fall to scan the card and then rise subtly.

"I caught the flu earlier this year, and that was a walk in the park," Michael says, flashing a smile.

His voice lowers and he turns to a friend.

"Every time I've had problems and things go wrong, I've been able to pull it off. It's knowing I've always been able to pull if off that gives me hope I'll be able to pull it off in the end."

Michael takes in every moment. The precious days of his short journey are filled with laughter and good friends.

"A lifetime is however long God gives you," he said.

n a December evening in 1995, Michael closed his books. He was tired of studying for his third set of semester finals as a computer information systems major. To clear his mind and stretch his body, he cleaned his apartment. While dumping trash behind his apartment, he slipped on ice. In the weeks after the fall, an ache gripped his shoulder and moved into his left arm.

"It felt bruised, like an old football injury that never went away," he said.

The pain slowly increased and distracted him, even in lectures while his arm remained still. He made an appointment at Lafene Health Center between classes in February.

"They weren't looking for a 20-year-old coming in there with some type of cancer most doctors have never seen," Michael said.

Allan Holiday Jr., an orthopedic surgeon on his weekly rotation at Lafene, found a tumor in Michael's X-rays. Michael was concerned, but opted to judge a 4-H project competition that Saturday as planned.

"It all happened so fast," Michael said. "I was worried, but I wanted to keep doing what I was doing."

He was unaware that during the original fall, a rare form of cancer called malignant fibrous histiocytoma, usually found in leg bones and almost unheard of in people younger than 50, had burst from his bone into soft tissue, forming a grapefruit-size tumor.

Michael swallowed hard while holding the X-ray and then quickly chose to endure four months of intensive chemotherapy. He returned home the week after each treatment so his family could help. The chemotherapy diminished his appetite, made him vomit and left him feeling nauseated and uncomfortable.

Despite hair loss and other side effects, the chemotherapy failed to destroy a single cancerous cell. His body reacted violently to another form of chemotherapy and the delayed physical reaction left acid-lined scars on his right arm. Michael understand for the first time that he could die.

stood for the first time that he could die.

But he survived. During the weeks of recuperation between treatments, he grew restless for classes and friends. He returned to K-State and met with professors to pass nine hours of spring fast. "My life has changed. I can't do what most 21-year-olds can do. I can't drink alcohol because of the medicine and can't stand the smoke at bars because of my lungs," he said:

"He couldn't wait to get back here because it helps keep his mind off everything," said Melinda Ketterl, Michael's sister and a sophomore in human ecology.

"He has to be the strongest person I know. He is a positive person. He just decided he was going to live life. I think he tells himself he doesn't have time to get depressed."

ichael confronted another tough decision when the semester ended. A 12-hour surgery June 10 replaced the cancerous bone of his left arm with a steel rod. Afterwards, doctors told him the aggressive disease had grown through his nerves.

The arm meant nothing, Michael thought, if removing it meant he could beat the cancer.

A four-quarter amputation of his shoulder and arm left him 30 pounds lighter. The day after the operation, less than a week after the first surgery, Michael surprised doctors by walking the halls of the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn.

"It makes standing on one foot hard, but how often do I need to stand on one foot?" Michael said, laughing. "There are some times I feel like a normal person, but there aren't many. They say you can do everything, but you can't. It's not possible."

Before the start of fall 1996, Michael moved into an apartment near campus with his sister, Melinda, and their cousin, Spencer Ketterl, a freshman in animal sciences and industry.

> "I help them with their homework, and they help me with things I can't do," Michael said at the time. "I'm here because I want to get a degree and get out and get married. I want to find a good job."

> After the amputation, even the small tasks required some adjustment. He first used Dycum pads, which secure pens or cups to flat surfaces, while studying for a test. Later he bought a Rocker knife to make cutting easier with one hand.

"I have a special knife for cutting meat, but I can't pull a piece of bread apart," Michael said. "I miss the simple things like opening things or carrying things. I used to be a bit of a mechanic, but you can't climb under a car and hold a bolt at the same time."

Each time he faced a challenge or bad news, Michael would say, "Well, that sucks." Then he would start looking for solutions.

learned to type as quickly with one hand as he had with two. Tearing perforated computer paper seemed impossible until he figured out he could hold down the sheet with his knee and tear with his hand.

"The simple things are the toughest because it hurts most when you can't do it," Melinda Ketterl said. "Sometimes he asks me to help him out so he doesn't get discouraged. He's always been protective of me, and that's what makes it easy to be there and help out."

After logging many hours on his personal computer, Michael

Throughout his son's life, Mark Ketterl tried to instill common sense while he encouraged him to reach for the stars.

"Michael has made us proud," he said. "We've always been a close family and always talked to our children about what is and should be important."

Now, Michael just wanted to graduate from K-State. He could reach for the stars later.

"He's been independent. It's important to him and we're willing to let him go do what he cares about," Becky Ketterl, Michael's mom, said.

"A lot of people with cancer set long-term goals, but he has set a short-term goal. He wants to graduate from K-State. He wanted to go to college, although a lot of people ask why in his condition. It bothers me when kids have a head, two arms and don't appreciate being able to set long-term goals."

weekly visits. Davis said Michael had been visiting Lafene since the beginning of the school year where they would talk about everything from his health to K-State athletics. "(1) don't really ask how Michael's cancer, malignant fibrous histiocytoma, had taken his left arm and required a four-quarter amputation of his shoulder. "There are some times I feel like a normal person, but there aren't many. They say you can do everything, but you can't. It's not possible," he said.

BELOW. MICHAEL ALIGNS his cards in a homemade holder he designed in order to play Pitch. With only one arm, Michael needed something to hold up his cards, so with the help of his sister Melinda, he constructed a wooden card holder to help out. Michael tried to make a habit of playing Pitch with friends every Wednesday night.

chemotherapy. Joe Campbell, Michael's adviser and a computer and information systems instructor, helped keep Michael on track for graduation. He gathered classwork and kept instructors informed during Michael's longer or unscheduled absences.

"I see these kids on campus who have a no-fear, daredevil attitude, and I wonder how brave they would be in his shoes," Campbell said.

'Mike is battling a pretty tough thing, and I can't speak for Mike, but my feeling is that he's going to keep fighting as long as he has something to fight for. I think he would view leaving college and returning home as giving up."

o matter how tired he occasionally became, game days always began by pulling on his ICAT T-shirt and leaving early for either KSU Stadium or Bramlage Coliseum to find a better seat in the student section. Cold football weather meant a thicker layer of purple and joining friends.

Weekends brought a chance to play computer games and the card game Pitch and to rent movies with his roommates and friends. Hours with his sister, Melinda, and her fiancé, Travis Kurth, a recent K-State graduate, made him round the time K-State faced its toughest football opponent, Nebraska, doctors recommended a surgery to remove 71 cancerous spots from Michael's lungs. Doctors were concerned the cancerous masses had spread and could not be removed. They warned Michael he could suffocate from a lack of oxygen during the surgery.

Missing the Nebraska game disappointed Michael, a 1994 graduate of Lewis High School and a center on its football team. His parents promised that if he survived the surgery and K-State went to a bowl game, they would take him wherever the Wildcats played.

"Michael had all the faith in the world," Becky Ketterl said. "He's been incredible to us. Michael smiled as they wheeled him down the hall, and he said 'I'll see you later. He had some connection and knew he'd pull through."

The surgery removed one-third of his lungs. He sur-

"I was playing one-handed racquetball before my surgery," Michael said during lunch in late January. "That surgery was the hardest because if I talked to anyone, I would be out of breath. I could say maybe a word. It made it a challenge to get from one place to another."

Although he was no longer in chemotherapy, Michael's appetite slowly diminished in the weeks before spring

During an appointment in March, doctors handed Michael his X-rays, called his family and sat down. The original X-rays of his lungs had been black. Months later, white spots appeared as the cancer spread. These latest Xrays were almost completely white.

Michael swallowed hard. He walked out of the appointment and told his parents he had plans to make.

"When you have something like this, you keep your loose ends tied up because you don't want to die with unfinished business," he said.

A spring break trip to San Diego for medicine and to lift his spirits left him coughing constantly, and he was placed on oxygen. He saw the ocean from the purple car his parents rented.

When he returned home, he began tying up many of those loose ends.

A few days before his April 15 birthday, Michael found a plot of land on top of the hill at Belpre Cemetery just north of his family farm near Lewis.

"Farming is in his blood, and he hasn't had a chance to farm his own land or own his own home with his own family," Becky Ketterl said.

"Michael told me he wanted to own his own land, even if it was a cemetery plot," she said.

"I'm inspired with the faith he's shown."

Michael was waiting for a blood transfusion he was scheduled to get that night. After spring break, Michael's breathing problems became too serious for him to stay in Manhattan. He returned home to the family farm in Lewis to get help from his parents. "He's been independent. It's important to him and we were willing to let him go do what he cares about. It wasn't until his breathing problems that he came home," Becky Ketterl, Michael's mom, said.

Pitino leaves Kentucky for Celtics coaching job

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LEXINGTON, Ky. - Rick Pitino is leaving one of college basketball's most successful programs to coach the NBA's most storied team - the Boston Celtics. His reported $70 million, 10year contract is believed to be the richest for any coach in any sport. Pitino, who had called the Celtics' job the greatest opportunity ever afforded a coach, announced his decision at a news conference today at the school he led to the Final Four three times in his eight years there, winning the national

He now returns to the NBA and the city where he began his head coaching career in 1978, at Boston University.

Pitino, who coached the New York Knicks from 1987-89, faces the daunting task of rebuilding the Celtics, who have more wins and titles than any team in NBA history but finished last year with a franchise-worst 15-67 record.

"I'd like to take this glorious tradition and see if we can bring it back," said Pitino, who had been flirting with a return to the NBA for several years.

He accepted a reported 10-year contract worth about $70 million, exceeding the $25 million, five-year contract the Philadelphia 76ers gave Larry Brown this week

Pitino, however, would not discuss details of his contract, which he said he did not sign until 10 minutes before the news conference. He said he would have another news conference in Boston

'You don't at this stage in my life leave for money," Pitino said, adding that he didn't make a final decision until Monday night.

The Celtics, who refused to comment today, seemed ready to welcome Pitino with a front-office shakeup, which might persuade special assistant Larry Bird to remain with the team.

Pitino said last month he would be interested in the Celtics only if Bird stayed, an uncertain prospect because the Indiana Pacers are willing to give Bird a lucrative contract to coach his home-state team.

Yet personnel moves could satisfy some of Bird's public complaints about the management setup. The Boston Herald reported that team owner Paul Gaston was still trying to keep Bird.

The Celtics vacancy developed when M.L. Carr quit last Wednesday after two nonplayoff seasons in which the team was 48-116.

Carr, who stayed as director of basketball operations, began notifying his assistant coaches they should be prepared to move on, the Boston Globe reported Monday.

Director of travel and team services Wayne Lebeaux and director of publications and information Dave Zuccaro were fired, both Boston papers reported.

Two marketing employees also reportedly lost their jobs, and general manager Jan Volk also might leave after

It also said Pitino is expected to bring Kentucky associate coach Jim O'Brien with him to Boston.

Pitino called himself a small contributor in building "this very strong house" at Kentucky, which has more wins than any team in college basketball. The Wildcats were one victory short of repeating as national champs this year, losing to Arizona in the NCAA title game in Indianapolis.

Pitino spent his first five years as head coach at Boston University, from 1978-83, and coached Providence from

"I spent 11 years of my adult life in New England," Pitino said. "The remaining years of my coaching life can be spent in the area I started out."

Jayhawks assure Kansas of being back in national picture

LAWRENCE — The NBA's loss is more than just Kansas' gain. It's Kansas' salvation.

Without Paul Pierce and Raef LaFrentz, college basketball's most successful program in the 1990s (not counting the NCAA Tournament, but that's another story) was in danger of sinking into also-ran status.

The dip probably would not have lasted long. Roy Williams is too good and too driven to let that happen.

But for a year or so at least, the haughty Jayhawks and their followers might have been

Now, the decision by the sophomore star and the junior all-American to delay NBA millions means Kansas will once again be the team to beat in the Big 12. By the beginning of the spring semester when LSU transfer Lester Earl becomes eligible, they'll probably be ready to challenge for national respect.

When the season starts next year, most national pollsters will consider the loss of the Jayhawks in scoring in all their postseason Billy Thomas for Haase's old job of off guard. Scot Pollard and rank the Jayhawks significantly below the No. 1 status they enjoyed for most of last season. But with a little luck and a lot of Williams' coaching and motivational savvy, it isn't farfetched to believe the 1997-98 Jayhawks could, by tournament time, approach the skill level of last year's 34-2 squad.

At power forward will be the 6'11" LaFrentz - Big 12 player of the year, all-American, NBA lottery pick, early favorite for national player of the year.

Williams' research indicated LaFrentz would have gone in the top five in this year's injured wrist. And while he might not be as slick a ballhandler, he might give the Jayhawks more of an offensive threat.

A gifted athlete, the LSU transfer could step in right away at center.

Without Pierce and LaFrentz, Williams would probably have been forced to use his freshmen much more than he would prefer. Now, he'll be able to season them slowly and more effectively.

Without Pierce and LaFrentz, the Jayhawks would probably not have been ranked in the preseason polls. Now, they ought to go charging into the season in the top 10. "I have a plan, and I have a plan, and I have plan," said Williams, flashing that crafty Iknow-something-you-don't-know grin - the one adoring fans have come to love and frustrated foes have learned to loathe.

Love for baseball, not quest for history, motivates woman pitcher to become 1st to play in minors

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ST. PAUL, Minn. - Someday Ila Borders might think of herself as a pioneer. For now, she just wants to be a Saint.

Borders, a left-handed pitcher, will go to training camp with the independent-league St. Paul Saints next week with a chance to become the first woman to play in a regular-season minor league game.

That's not why Borders has decided to become the latest curiosity for the quirky team run by the son of flamboyant former major league owner Bill Veeck and part-owned by comedian

Bill Murray. She just wants to pitch.

'It's not for women's rights. It's not a statement," Borders said Monday. "I'm going over there because I love baseball and I want to be part of the St. Paul Saints.'

Borders already knows about breaking ground.

She was the first woman to receive a college baseball scholarship in 1994 when she signed with Southern California College, an NAIA school. She played three seasons there before transferring to Whittier College, an NCAA Division III school.

She was 4-5 with a 5.22 ERA in 81 innings at Whittier this season.

Borders doesn't throw hard. Her fastball has been clocked as high as 83 mph, but it most often comes in in the high 70s. But she has good control and changes speeds well.

"There's a lot of guys who throw 90 mph and never get anybody out because their ball is straight," Saints manager Marty Scott said. "She's got a little bit of movement, and she knows how to pitch.'

And, most importantly, she's a lefty. Even her father admits that was his immediate reaction when she stopped struggling to use a spoon with her right hand as an infant and picked it up with her left hand.

'My first thought was, 'Well, lefthanded pitchers don't grow on trees," Phil Borders said.

Neither do women in baseball. Tim Wiles, director of research at the Hall of Fame, cited the following examples of women competing on men's teams:

· Jackie Mitchell struck out Babe Ruth and Lou Gehrig in an exhibition game for the Chattanooga (Tenn.) Lookouts in 1931.

• The Harrisburg (Pa.) Senators signed shortstop Eleanor Engle in 1952, but she never played. George Trautman, president of the National Association of Professional Baseball Leagues, banned women following Engle's signing. Major league commissioner Ford Frick backed Trautman.

• Toni Stone (a St. Paul native), Peanut Johnson and Connie Morgan all played in the Negro leagues in the

• Julie Croteau and Lee Anne Ketchum played for the Maui Stingrays in the Hawaiian Winter League in 1994.

 Pamela Davis pitched one inning in relief and earned the victory for the Class AA Jacksonville Suns, a Detroit Tigers farm team, in an exhibition game against the Australian national team last year.

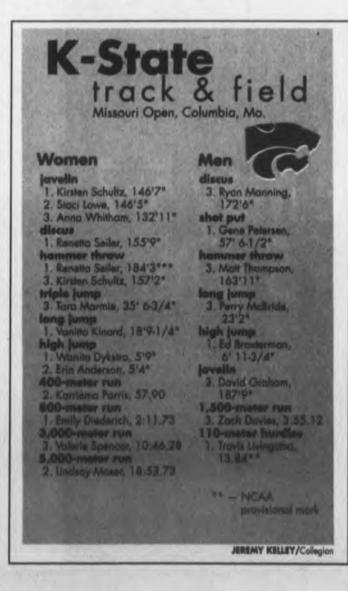

The Saints, who have won the Northern League title three of four vears since the league's inception, open training camp at Midway Stadium on May 15. Borders, 5'10" and 160 pounds, is expected to be among 14 pitchers vying for 10 spots. The regular season begins May 30.

A starter most of her college career, Borders' most likely role is short relief.

"It's not going to be an easy road, I understand that," she said.

The Saints have become the nation's best-known independent minor league team under president and co-owner Mike Veeck. They routinely fill their 6,329-seat stadium using gimmicks such as a pig mascot and a nun who gives massages, along with

I constantly come across new faces every day.

New faces I have obviously never seen before, but

new faces that

I was raised on the values of hard work, and I was taught by my mother and father never to quit from anything and never back down when the waters got rough. They were persistent in their efforts to instill those values in me so that when I was on my own, I could find a stable place in the real world.

But of late, I feel that that training was all in vain because the molders of those characteristics are no more. They seemingly have called it quits themselves and turned their backs on everything I was taught. No, I don't resent them for that, but now it feels as if I am left to stay afloat in a raging river without any sort of a lifesaver.

All of that has gone to the wayside in the world in which we live. I now have to conform to my own set of standards. I now have decide for myself what I will do with my life, where I want to go, whom I want to be with and most of all, whom I want to please.

It's not a fable stating that one cannot please everyone. This is simply an impossible task. Everyone is left to decide whom they wish to please and whom they wish to do things for.

But in this business it's not about who you can or want to please, but rather how much you can suck up to the big-wigs. I see it all the time, and it eats away at my inside. I see all these socalled journalists who are really doing nothing but playing the role of teacher's pet to get the dirt on why Andre Anderson was actually kicked off the football team and why he can't get along with his roommate. Or why Tiger Woods, the proclaimed Messiah, is allegedly a foul-mouthed little punk who has the book on every sexual joke imaginable.

It's not about pleasing the reader, pleasing the editor or pleasing your boss, but about how much you can suck up. It's not hard work anymore. It's simple, self-gratifying pleasures after which you can scream in exaltation and say, "I really know how to kiss some butt."

It's not about heart anymore. It's not about desire anymore. It's not about having the qwan. It's not about common courtesy. It's not about how much you love doing what you do, because apparently it's never good enough. So it's trite and overused, but it makes sense. Nobody cares about the Lawrence Phillips types who are arrogant and make a name for themselves by breaking the law and assaulting women. It's all about one angry dwarf and 200 solemn faces. Wow. What about the guys who are out there who are little, and at a little disadvantage, and try their hardest to make up for that by throwing every ounce of energy he can muster in his body into what he does? That doesn't even matter anymore because all the world is left to discuss the matter behind his back when he can make no defense. It's the easy way out. It's easy to kick Rodney King when he's down on the ground. Nobody in this world has the audacity to stand up and say "You suck," or "You are slacking off," but just throw some words in the fan, sit back and watch them spread across the room because it's easy. Because it's easy. All the pleasures have gone away. If it's not in the heart anymore, it doesn't matter what's in the mind, because everything goes straight to the wind if it's not in the heart. I never have understood why people quit, why people give up. What is more of a motivator than having the satisfaction of knowing that you have given it your all and that everything inside of you was devoted to the task at hand? Anymore, people have forgotten and, quite frankly, people don't care about anyone but themselves, what position they can get next and how much they can suck up to get that position.

Because it's easy. I'll admit it's not so easy to take the road less traveled. I'll admit I sometimes lose all motivation. I'll admit you cannot please everybody. But I have never stopped giving it my all, and I have never stopped working hard. It's in my nature. That's just how I tick.

Ground search for Republic of Texas fugitive scaled back

FORT DAVIS, Texas - Troopers resumed an aerial search Tuesday for a fugitive Republic of Texas member but scaled back the hunt on the ground in the rugged Davis Mountains.

No sightings had been reported of the last missing Texas separatist involved in last week's

On Monday, another fugitive shot three tracking dogs and then was killed in a shootout. Both men had disappeared into the mountains hours before other allies of the group ended a weeklong standoff with authorities.

"We're pretty much going to go back to routine law enforcement," Department of Public Safety spokesman Mike Cox said Tuesday, referring to the scaled-down ground search. "We've pretty much shown that we can get back here in a hurry if we're needed."

DPS officials said the search was being limited because the rugged terrain and remoteness of the area would make it difficult to send in emergency workers if someone was injured.

The countryside is so rough that horses called in Monday to carry off the corpse of the dead fugitive had to turn back. Instead, the body was removed by helicopter.

"Safety, from their perspective, is why they're scaling back," Cox said. "The area around there is so treacherous and dangerous, someone could die from a routine injury - like breaking their leg, twisting an ankle - and wouldn't be able to get back out."

The man still being sought Tuesday had never been spotted Monday, when authorities scoured the mountains on horseback and helicopter and with trained dogs.

"There is some feeling now that maybe they were not together," Cox said.

The two men, 48-year-old Mike Matson and 21-year-old Richard Frank Keyes III, had left the Republic's remote headquarters separately on Saturday. Authorities said they were believed armed with rifles and at least one handgun.

The group believes that Texas, formerly an independent republic, was illegally absorbed by the United States in the 1840s.

On Monday, Republic leader Richard McLaren and his wife, Evelyn, were indicted on charges of defrauding businesses out of hundreds of thousand of dollars with phony money. Several followers also were indicted.

The McLarens tried ripping off banks and merchants by handing out worthless warrants and receipts to open checking accounts and pay bills for territorial passports and badges, prosecutors

The McLarens applied for credit cards with the warrants, and tried to use them to pay off a print shop for 5,000 Republic of Texas passports and a jeweler for 75 sterling silver badges, prosecutors

"Creditors who complained about having received a worthless warrant and then getting a worthless receipt on top of that were threatened with so-called 'marks of reprisals' by the defendants," U.S. Attorney Paul Coggins said.

Coggins called the McLarens "paper terrorists. They're not revolutionaries, but ripoff artists. They're not patriots, but parasites. In short, they're Although officials would not release the name of the man killed Monday, he was described as middle-aged.

"Yeah, that's my brother," Ralph Matson, brother of Mike Matson, told the Associated Press after being read a description of the victim.

The man was sleeping when search dogs found him. Startled, he fired his pistol and fled into the woods. Three dogs unleashed to track the fugitives were shot. One died and the other two were in good condition. A fourth dog was missing.

Dogs tracked the man down again in the afternoon. He fired again and was shot in the arm by DPS officers.

He fell, stood up and fired at a helicopter before he was hit again and killed.

Matson, originally from Chicago but a resident California since 1983, came to the Davis Mountains less than three months ago after leaving California and hitchhiking around the country, his brother said from Colorado Springs, Colo.

Wanted by California for breaking probation by leaving the state, he harbored a longstanding grudge against the government after losing a $110,000 inheritance in a 1991 court battle, the Oakland Tribune reported Tuesday

"I don't intend to survive another jail term. If I am to die, I will die fighting somehow - somewhere," Matson was quoted as saying in a newsletter article he sent to the Tribune in December.

Ralph Matson said his brother did not join the Texas group, but committed himself to protecting

"My brother told McLaren 'I'll take bullets for you and your wife, I'll guard you like no one has ever been guarded, but I need to know that you are serious, that this isn't a game because I won't go to jail," Ralph Matson said.

Former boss hopes fugitive from Kansas alive

ST. MARYS - Residents of this eastern Kansas town waited Tuesday to hear whether a Republic of Texas member shot dead by police was Richard Keyes III.

Shortly before the end of a weeklong standoff in Fort Davis, Texas, between police and Republic of Texas leader Richard McLaren, Keyes and another man fled into nearby woods.

The man shot Monday afternoon in the woods behind McLaren's trailer was believed to be Mike Matson, a 48-yearold former Marine. Officials would not release the name of the victim, but said he was middle-aged. Keyes is 21.

"Apparently, they're still being shot at and can't get to the body," Pottawatomie County Sheriff Tony Metcalf said Tuesday.

Of the two fugitives, only Keyes was charged with a crime. He was accused of organized criminal activity and kidnapping related to an April 27 hostagetaking that started the secessionist group's seven-day standoff, which ended peacefully Saturday.

City Commission denies drainage system

The Manhattan City Commission denied a petition Tuesday brought forth by residents of Snowbird Addition to improve their storm water drainage system.

The petition included the construction of a concrete channel that would run between Tamarron Terrace and Hillview Drive, along the property lines of area home owners

Jack Messer, city engineer, said the channel would solve the standing water problem in this area.

"This section is a very swampy area.

The fact that it's continually wet keeps residents from being able to maintain their yards," he said.

Opposition to the petition came from a few concerned homeowners included in the benefit district who were concerned that the proposal would solve only a part of the problem.

Jim Hynek, concerned resident, said, 'We need a project that will also help with the storm water release, not just the maintenance problems of the swampy area."

He said the neighborhood wasn't informed that the project would only solve the standing water problem.

The commission denied the petition in order to allow the neighborhood to come to a decision on exactly what improvements they wanted.

Also discussed in Tuesday night's meeting was a funding request by the Boys and Girls Club of Manhattan. The request of $150,000 would go toward the construction of a new facility that would better meet its needs

"Our current office can only house between 65 and 75 kids at a time. We do need a facility with approximately 4,000

A concern voiced in the meeting was whether or not $150,000 would be enough to build an adequate facility.

Mary Bosco, Manhattan Youth Council member, said, "We would like to see them make something bigger to serve as many youth as possible in the community."

After deliberation, the commission voted to table the motion in order for the Youth Council and the Boys and Girls Club to discuss options that would better serve Manhattan's youth in the long run.

K-State ranks in top 100 for technological services

BECKY WINTER

K-State's cyberspace opportunities are out of this world, according to a new article in Yahoo! Internet Life magazine, which ranks K-State in the "100 Most Wired Colleges."

"This says we are in an extremely good position to provide our students with technological services," said Beth Unger, vice provost for academic services and technology and dean of continuing education.

K-State is the only university in Kansas to receive the honor and is also ranked as one of the top 25 public universities selected for recognition.

The University's ranking was based on four criteria, which included the availability of hardware and wiring to the students, its use in academic programs, the services that were provided to the students, and its social and recre-

"We've been doing a lot of aggressive planning, and it's been implemented in a way that really works," Jim Coffman, University provost, said. "We're starting to see the results.

Unger said K-State's faculty is one reason it received recognition.

"What really made this fly was the faculty," Unger said. "Our strength really came from how much the faculty used the technology effectively in the instructional process.

Unger said another reason K-State received the honor is that all K-State students are issued an account, which provides students with an e-mail account and access to the World Wide Web and computer labs on campus

"We try to make sure that everything we have is available to the students, Unger said.

Four other universities in the Big 12 received the honor - Iowa State University, the University of Texas at Austin, Oklahoma State University and Texas A&M University.

Coffman said he hopes the University continues to place technology as a priority.

"We are well positioned for a future that is going to necessitate the effective use of technology," Coffman said. "It's up to us now to keep pushing hard to leverage our position.

Parking council changes wording on fall permits

BRIAN SMOLLER staff reporter

At the final parking council meeting of the semester, the topic of permits arose again

Instead of the much-publicized reserved parking permits, the vendor permits for construction workers on campus were the subject of discussion.

The council addressed the problem of construction workers that filled up parking slots on campus two to three years ago, John Lambert, director of public safety, said.

The price of the permit was then instituted at $85 per year. The council amended the wording of the permit procedure without changing the price, Phil Anderson, parking council member said.

"Now it will coincide with the prevailing price," Lambert said.

This fall, parking permit applications will be decorated with statements regarding parking procedures at K-State.

A disclaimer will be placed on the 1998 parking regulations and possibly will be on this year's permit application stating: "The lack of a no parking sign does not imply a legal spot. The parking council will also have a mission statement on the fall permit applications: "To provide reliable and informative customer service in a courteous and timely manner, while providing a positive parking experience given the limitations of space, finances, rules required to operate."

Lambert said the mission statement might be on the parking regulations this year, but it will probably be put off until

The Department of Parking also announced the appointment of its new director, Darwin "Ace" Abbott.

Abbott takes over for the interim director, Peggy Winkler, who will resume her former job within the department.

Kasparov, IBM's Deep Blue computer tied in chess series

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK - It was advantage no one after game three of world chess champion Garry Kasparov's match against IBM's Deep Blue computer, as man and machine played to a draw. Tuesday's deadlock left their series tied at one win each.

Kasparov offered the computer a draw after his 48th move. Deep Blue immediately accepted, ending the 4-1/2-hour contest.

"Today I didn't play well, but the computer was a computer and eventually it knew enough not to lose the game," Kasparov said.

The 34-year-old Russian defeated Deep Blue in Saturday's opening game of the series, when the computer resigned after Kasparov's 45th move. On Sunday, Kasparov resigned after the computer's 45th move, though a subsequent review of the game showed he could have played for a draw.

Kasparov defeated the computer last year and has said that barring human error, man will always be better than the machine at chess. But, speaking publicly for the first time since Sunday's loss, he said he believes Deep Blue showed signs of artificial intelligence in its game two win.

"I still believe (Sunday's) game will be studied by all computer specialists because I think something truly unbelievable happened," Kasparov said. "I don't know how it happened. I think that this machine understands it's time to think.

On Tuesday, Kasparov played white, giving him the slight advantage of making the first move. He opened in the same cautious manner as he began the first two games, playing a slow-developing series of moves in which his offensive intentions were not immediately clear.

"Both sides had pawn weaknesses and neither side could make any progress," said Manhattan grandmaster John Fedorowicz. "Kasparov still had the advantage in the final position, but it wasn't enough to win at all."

IBM technicians have said they have improved Deep Blue since last year, but they have never claimed the computer can think on its own. Game four of the match is scheduled for Wednesday, with games five and six to be played on Saturday and Sunday. If Kasparov wins, he takes home $700,000 of a $1.1 million purse. If Deep Blue wins, the $700,000 goes to IBM.

MELVIN VS. THE WORLD

More than a million people do it every year, yet many stay constricted by the smoking habit. Here's the way they can be ekin' butt

In 1988, the U.S. Surgeon General reported that nicotine was just as addictive as heroin and cocaine. Yet 1.3 million people quit smoking each year, according to the American Lung Association.

"I get asked on a daily basis to help people who want to stop smoking," Dr. Debra Doubek, physician at Manhattan Family Physicians, said. "People have to really want to quit," she said.

Doubek said many benefit from alternate forms of "The patches are the easiest," she said. The only quitting aid Lafene Health Center carries is Nicoderm CQ, one type of nicotine patch. Doubek said she didn't recommend one specific prod-

"All of the alternate forms take away withdrawal symptoms, such as irritability and increased heart rate,"

In her recent experience, Doubek said 80 to 90 percent of those who use alternate forms of nicotine succeed

The patches really seem to help people if they stick to it," Pam Spaulding, director of pharmacy

Nicoderm patches, however, are not the only option. Products such as Nicorette (nicotine gum) and Nicotrol (nicotine patch) are also available from local pharmacies.

Spaulding said one K-State student was prescribed a new nicotine nasal spray made by Nicotrol at

"However, they didn't follow through with it, so I don't know how well it works," she said.

"We get the best responses from Nicoderm CQ," Tina McVea, pharmacy technician at Wal-Mart, said. "It lways sells best,"

Many take advantage of the products. "I have to reorder them every day," she said.

The American Lung Association offers clinics and self-help booklets to smokers.

"Smokers gradually cut down until their quit day, then our guide helps them to change all their habits," said Mavis Glenn, programs associate at the American Lung

She said no nicotine products are included in the guide but that they are periodically recommended.

"We don't specifically endorse anything," said Carol Association.

"Everybody's different," Dr. Daniel C. Martin, physician at Lafene, said.

Verge magazine, the new men's publication that hit newsstands April 8, has taken newsstands INTIAL GEAR FOR PEAL LIF hostage. If the fluorescent red title doesn't grab you, perhaps the name will. Verge is the viewer's guide to technology.

'Verge is new and doesn't say exactly what it is," Jeff Csatari, editor, said. 'We conducted many focus groups and discovered in talking with men that they didn't like the names containing 'tech' or 'technology.' A lot of them liked Verge because it described movement and York-based design team Doublespace fun," Csatari said. "We wanted to Inc., Verge can get browsers lost in the appealing graphics and information, or what Csatari calls "lots of use-

"It's a matter of assigning and editing and bringing a fresh and visual look to the magazine," Csatari said. "Doublespace went for a look a lot different than other men's magazines.' For those who haven't picked up a copy of Verge, Csatari said the public can access Verge through its website (http://www.vergemag.com). On an ever-changing, fast-paced planet called Earth, society needed a publication whose mission was to keep tab on the new technologies that invades all parts of a man's life from the office to the bathroom. Each day a new discovery, a new gadget.

While most men's magazines incorporate a page updating the latest in trends and inventions, Verge dedicates 136 pages toward allowing men to maximize their lives.

'There wasn't a men's magazine geared toward aspects of ways to have launch a new magazine for Generation X.

As senior editor of Men's Health, Castari produced the "Malegrams" section for four years that with a package of photos, punchy headlines, information and entertainment, became the magazine's best-read sec-

Csatari brought his ingenuity to Verge and expanded on the "Malegrams" section by introducing "Buzz," a 20-page section focusing on the cutting edge of innovation and consumer technology.

"We want to speak to men in their language," Csatari said. "We use humor and make the writing as accessible as possible."

How does Csatari accomplish

"We get some pizzas and sit down in the office and brainstorm ideas with editors from other magazines,' he said. "We come up with some great and wild ideas on paper after three or four hours."

In Verge's premiere issue, besides telling an adventure story, author Geoffrey Norman focuses on the increasing technology in the gear used for cave scuba diving.

Through sections like "The Best Stuff," "Nothing But Net," "Health & Fitness" and "Sports Stuff," men can explore a variety of issues and grasp how increasing technology will affect different aspects of their lives.

Verge might neighbor several other new men's magazines on newsstands, including ICON and Maxim, but Csatari said he knew what readers wanted and vowed that Verge delivered a service to readers that none other could provide.

"I really don't know what the other publications are," Csatari said. "I come from a strong magazine background. Readers read to entertain and learn. It's a service magazine that provides tangible services that readers can use besides a good read."

Verge will be published quarterly through 1997 with an initial newsstand circulation of 150,000. Verge's second issue will hit the stands June TOPEKA — Republicans and Democrats both agreed that Kansans were the winners from this year's legislative session.

But Democrats were exasperated that the Legislature failed to pass a significant ethics reform measure and an increase in pensions for retired teachers and state employees. The session ended late Monday night.

"The refusal of this Legislature to give state retirees back a small fraction of their investment in the state retirement fund is criminal," House Minority Leader Tom Sawyer, D-Wichita, said

Democrats had sought an increase in the monthly pension checks for members of the Kansas Public Employees Retirement System, about 48,000 people. They eventually pushed a proposal to give retirees an extra check in October, worth an average of $237.

Senate President Dick Bond, R-Overland Park, said his biggest disappointment was the failure of a House-Senate conference committee to reach an agreement about turning the University of Kansas Medical Center hospital into a private operation.

"I think it's a real disservice to the state and the Med Center," Bond said.

The Kansas Board of Regents wanted to surrender control of the hospital and allow it to operate under a private authority so the hospital would be unencumbered by state regulations. Such a move would make the hospital competitive with private hospitals, the board concluded.

Eleventh-hour negotiations between House and Senate members Monday night fell apart just minutes before the Legislature adjourned. The House had included a provision that prohibited abortions from being performed at the medical center.

Republicans and Democrats said the session's best time came in March when the Legislature passed a $119 million tax package. "Clearly the high points were the tax cuts and significant funding of education," Bond said. "We did all that, and no one was badly in-

The Legislature added a total of about $42 million in new funds into the state's public school districts

House Speaker Tim Shallenburger, R-Baxter Springs, was more subdued about the session, but said he was pleased with the tax cuts. "We frankly spent too much money," he

The tax package was the product of negotiations involving Gov. Bill Graves and House members and senators from both parties.

House Democrats took some credit for passage of a welfare reform measure that requires the state to be more aggressive in collecting unpaid child support.

The bill, mandated by the federal government, drew criticism from conservatives who contend it unconstitutionally shifted power from the judicial branch to the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services.

Assistant to provost publishes 2 astronomy books

CYNTHIA NEILL

K-State professors are not the only authors

John Lankford, assistant to the provost, has recently published two new books.

"The American Astronomy: Community, Careers and Power, 1959-1940" is a biography of people involved in astronomy in the United States during those years.

Lankford spent 20 years researching the book, which was published by the University of Chicago Press.

Funding for the publication came from several sources, including the National Science Foundation and fellowships from the University of Missouri at Columbia.

Lankford also edited "The History of Astronomy: An Encyclopedia."

It is a reference book that includes information from several experts within the field. Lankford said he was chosen to edit the book because of his previous work in the field and his strong reputation.

However, this is not the first time Lankford's work has appeared in print. He said he has always been fascinated by science and has had many articles published, as well as several other books.

Lankford said that his interest in science was nurtured by his fourth-grade teacher. "She was my first really superb teacher," he

He said she showed slides of the constellations during class that caught his attention.

"Her images were so vivid during the day, I had to go out at night and see for myself what they looked like," Lankford said. "She really aroused my curiosity.

In addition to assisting the provost, Lankford also reviews books and propositions.

He has been the chair of and is a member of several astronomical and scientific organizations, and presents at lectures and seminars. Lankford said he doesn't have time to do everything he'd like to, such as teaching. "It would be nice, but I'm already so busy that I would need 40 hours in a day," he said.

Final report silent on ebonics issue in the classroom

ASSOCIATED PRESS

OAKLAND, Calif. - Members of the Oakland education task force that last December introduced the nation to ebonics presented a final report on Tuesday that didn't include the word.

"E is for emergency in education. It is not for ebonics," Toni Cook, school board member, said.

Officials stressed their word choice doesn't mean they're backing off the contention that teachers need training to deal with some black students who speak something other than standard

"None of us are shying away from the word ebonics," said Sylvester Hodges, chairman of the Task Force on the Education of African American

He and other school officials downplayed the missing ebonics — formed from the words ebony and phonics saying that it simply became unnecessary when it came time to write the gist of the recommendations.

However, Hodges conceded there had been a conscious effort to define exact meanings rather than use umbrella

Oakland school officials hadn't planned to make national headlines last December when the task force's first report prompted a school board resolution suggesting that ebonics, or black English, was a genetically based separate language.

While school officials insisted they were just trying to help black students learn English, critics denounced the resolution as legitimizing slang and underestimating black students.

In mid-January, the school board revised its resolution to, among other things, drop all suggestion that black English was genetically based. However, the resolution still declared that ebonics is not merely a dialect of English.

The final report refers only to the language systems of African Americans.

The report recommends expanding the state's Standard English Program to all preschools and elementary schools through third grade, where the black student population is 53 percent or higher.

It also recommends that sixth- and ninth-grade teachers be trained in that program, which helps black students transform the language they speak at home into proper English.

The language development recommendations are part of a five-year, nearly $2-million plan to improve the performance of black students, who make up 53 percent of Oakland's 52,000 stu-

Critics viewed the ebonics-free report as a positive move.

"The original document had an angry black separatist stamp on it," John McWhorter, professor of linguistics and African American studies at the University of California-Berkeley, told the Oakland Tribune.

JUDY MAYS, director of the business office at Lafene Health Center, writes a check for a piece of pottery she purchased from Bill Asmussen, senior in art. Asmussen and Mike Lemke, first-year graduate student in ceramics, said they will be selling pottery all day today.

He said he recommended initially trying to quit without nicotine aids but encouraged their use if that first try was unsuccessful.

"If you smoke four to five cigarettes a week, you don't really need extra help," Martin said. "But those who smoke a pack a day need all the help they can get." Martin also said the aids work well for withdrawal symptoms. "There's almost a 100-percent

On the field, Veeck gained nationwide attention last year by signing Darryl Strawberry and former All-Star pitcher Jack Morris and inviting Dave Stevens to camp. Stevens has no legs; he was dropped from the team before the season started.

Borders insists her motivation is to fulfill a dream that began when she switched from softball to baseball at age 10.

"She doesn't want to have to tell her kids and family that she made it because it was a show," her father said. "She wants to make it because she's a legitimate pitcher."

Manny Dies, K-State basketball forward, showed up at Collegian sports columnist Todd Stewart's door Tuesday night and allegedly threatened him.

Stewart said in a Jan. 27 column that Dies was the worst player in the history of college basketball. Dies and forward Pero Vasiljevic threatened Stewart and broke down the door of the room he was hiding in, Stewart said.

Riley County Police Department investigators are looking into the case to see if they can establish probable cause to arrest the suspects, Lt. Herb Crosby said. Stewart went to the RCPD Wednesday afternoon to press charges of criminal trespass, criminal threat and criminal damage to property.

Basketball coach Tom Asbury said Stewart and his roommate, Jeremy Kelley, should have zero concern for their safety.

"You can be assured that no harm will come to Todd and Jeremy, and you can on that. He was frustrated as we all have been by Todd's columns," Asbury said. "Todd had indicated that he would take him on any time day or night, and while I don't condone that,

One happy monkey will return home to Nebraska soon following a successful operation at the K-State Veterinary Medicine Complex.

Frosty, a 1-year-old Japanese macaque, was admitted to the exotic animal medicine clinic after suffering a fractured right femur while playing at home with a Labrador retriever.

Surgery was performed on the primate Monday, securing the injury with the insertion of a plate and several screws.

He is recovering in the clinic under the supervision of Dr. Jim Carpenter, professor of exotic animal medicine.

"Right now we are only administering him analgesics," Carpenter said. "This will help with the pain. Some pain is good, though. It will encourage him to stay off his leg."

Frosty will be required to stay at rest for at least six weeks when he returns

Carpenter and his staff are familiar with primate cases from working at the Sunset Zoological Park, although he admits that primates are often difficult to work with "Primates are very powerful and dangerous," he said. "They can be up to seven times as strong as a man, and they are very smart. We have to be very careful."

Special considerations must also be made to ensure that no illnesses are transferred between Frosty and the staff because the primate can catch human illnesses, and the staff can catch a pri-

Carpenter said primates should not be considered domestic pets, although Frosty did come from a private Nebraska home.

"I strongly urge people not to keep primates as pets," he said. "They are cute as babies, but the novelty soon wears off, and they can become danger-especially at sexual maturity.

Carpenter said Frosty's prognosis is fair, providing he stays off the injured leg for the full six weeks.

Nuns shaken, leaving downtown after burglary, rape in KC

ASSOCIATED PRESS

A tiny Roman Catholic convent of nuns devoted to serving the poor in downtown Kansas City is shaken and may move after a burglar raped and nearly strangled a 61-year-old sister. Early Tuesday morning, a thief broke into a second story window. While the sisters slept, he ransacked the kitchen, rifled the office and stole a minuscule amount of cash.

He then made his way to the bedroom of one nun. Threatening her with a knife, he raped and nearly

"She did try to resist," said Kansas City Police Sgt. Jim Keane. "Then he physically assaulted her."

The nun was admitted to an area hospital. Her injuries included "severe swelling of (her) neck" and damage to her airway, Keane said. She remained hospitalized Tuesday night.

The violence of the rape suggests that the man has raped before, Keane said. Police are not saying whether the pattern fits that of other recent attacks, but Keane believes the man may strike again.

Vietnam Veteran's Wall on display at Fort Riley

CHRISTINA SMITH

People wishing to honor American soldiers who died in the Vietnam War will be able to pay homage at Fort Riley beginning today

The traveling Vietnam Veterans Memorial wall will visit Fort Riley's Parade Field from today to May 11.

"The wall is being brought to Fort Riley to honor our Vietnam veterans," Deb Skidmore, media relations officer for the public affairs office, said.

The base also wants to help those who lost loved ones during the war, Skidmore said.

'We are hoping people will find a way of healing when they look at the wall," she said.

In the past, there have been as many as 10,000 visitors to the traveling memorial. The wall, which is a half-scale replica of the original wall in Washington, even has the same misspellings in the names, she said. Ceremonies will begin at 11 a.m. with an invocation, a 21-gun salute, a wreath-laying ceremony and the playing of "Taps." After the ceremony, all 58,202 names will be read aloud by volunteers. "We have no idea how long it will take to read all the names. But the exhibit is open for 24 hours a day while it is here," Skidmore said.

Rathbone's legacy to continue even after retirement

RUSSELL FORTMEYER

At K-State, the College of Engineering and Don Rathbone are considered one and the same.

In nearly every aspect of the college, the influence of Rathbone can be seen - whether that be new facilities, an evolving curriculum, outstanding faculty or motivated

So, when Rathbone announced he would retire after 24 years as one of the longest-serving deans in the country, K-State suddenly needed a replacement for an irreplaceable icon.

He has grown right along with the engineering profession and seen radical shifts in thinking, teaching and "Engineering is an interesting academic pursuit because some things haven't changed at all, like the basics of mathematics, English and the sciences," Rathbone said, sitting in an industry. However, the aspect of engineering he would like to see improved most is that cliché about engineers lacking the ability to express themselves. It's no wonder, then, that Rathbone is considered one of the most expressive engineering deans around.

THE DEAN'S INFLUENCE OUTSIDE OF K-STATE

Jack Hinton, president of the National Society of Professional Engineers, has been friends with Rathbone since they met while serving on a Kansas Society of Professional Engineers committee

"Engineers have gotten a bad rap on not being able to curriculum to include a written communications class for engineers - just one example of his goal to improve engineering students. "He is very articulate and persuasive in trying to move NSPE and the image of the engineer forward," Hinton said.

Besides working to further the College of Engineering, Rathbone has been at the forefront of international issues. Rathbone said he thinks the professional engineering industry has become less loyal to its workers, which has contributed to an instability throughout the profession.

"Industry marches to their own drum," he said. "They listen to us and we might influence them a little, but it works in reverse, too. We're not as greatly influenced by them as we maybe should be."

But the world of academia and the economy-driven world have worked hand-in-hand.

Rathbone has been instrumental in attracting businesses to Manhattan, like Troy Design Manufacturing, that have actively partnered with engineering students and researchers at K-State.

Hinton said he is encouraging Rathbone to run for president of NSPE next year, but he expects Rathbone will continue his support of the society regardless.

"Dean Rathbone is extremely appreciated by the engineering community," Hinton said. "K-State is very respected throughout the country in large part because of the image Don Rathbone presents of the University."

As a journalist, I have specific responsibilities. Like in other professions, journalists are expected to be loyal, accurate, unbiased and trustworthy. But above all, we are expected to print the truth. Among all the style rules, interview techniques and ethical dilemmas, truth is one quality educators tirelessly preach. After all, we can't all write for the National Enquirer. As journalists, we have ethical codes, First Amendment limitations and editors who keep us in line. They are the checks and balances of mass communications. But there is one channel of the communication chain that is responsibility-free. I speak of the readers. They are free to open the pages, read the type and believe whatever they want. There are no codes, amendments or Big Brothers looking over their shoulders making sure they read and comprehend the black and I know what you are thinking right now.

There are columnists (I am not mentioning names) who print whatever dribbles out of their little heads. They write blatantly false information and refrain from supporting it with evidence. Who would believe these "journalists?"

Please understand that they are the exception to the rule, and most serious journalists are embarrassed to be associated with such poor journalism.

I understand that when readers consume the news media, everything is open to personal interpretation, and I am in no way discrediting this, but there is a fine line between personal interpretation and misinterpretation.

After being a columnist for a semester, I have quickly realized that when people do not approve of or agree with the subject matter, they tend to "read into" or misinterpret the presented infor-

I am not speaking of criticism. As George's therapist told him in "Seinfeld," "If you're going to be in the creative field, you have to learn to deal with criticism." I can deal with criticism. It is the misinterpretation of which I speak.

An example of this came early in the semester, when I wrote a column concerning the pep band. I proposed that the University provide the members with matching purple shirts. In doing this, I described the band as "classy," "an asset" and "deserving of a wrote me, glad

Yuler of the known that the band was mentioned in the paper. He wrote, "Thanks so much for mentioning us in the paper." Then I got a letter from a member who wasn't so pleased with my column. She said that there were "many people with upset MATT HAWKINS/Collegian his mark on the national college feelings toward your views." She was angry that I suggested that they get uniforms because they could not afford them, but in actuality, I proposed a fundraiser through the Alumni Association.

As a columnist, I often touch on subjects that offend, upset and maybe even outrage readers. (This is especially true if the readers happen to be Jayhawk fans.) This phenomena does not shock me. I was well aware of this before I ever took the job. But the ironic thing is that readers get angry over things I never wrote. (That doesn't mean that I never thought them, but that is another story!)

In one column, I discussed the virtues of Bill Snyder and his football magic. I happened to write, "He is the best coach to grace the plains of this state." I went on to acknowledge that some may vote for Roy Williams as the best coach, but that it was impossible to compare them because of the varying degrees of their programs when they started at their respected universities.

Many might remember that when Snyder stepped in, our football team couldn't beat Podunk U. (I say that affectionately), and when Williams took his job, the basketball program was already a top-ranking

Stewart - or any Collegian columnist - can do such things such as write a letter to the editor, telephone or schedule an appointment with an editor. There's a big difference between writing a letter to the editor and taking physical action. Stewart, like any other individual, does not deserve to be the victim of any crime. Unfortunately, this isn't the first time K-State athletes have come under scrutiny for actions off the

In fact, this alleged incident might sound remotely familiar. Almost two years ago, the Collegian reported about three football players who were charged with crimes related to trespassing and willingness to commit battery related to charging into a student's home

Last fall, football player Chris Canty received a DUI shortly after K-State received its invitation to the Cotton Bowl. In addition, K-State football player Lance Grace was cited and charged for battery in Aggieville. His actions resulted in a dismissal from the team.

Even last week, football player Andre Anderson was kicked off the team for violating an unknown team rule. Last season, Anderson had reportedly failed a drug test, was kicked off the team and did return.

Tuesday night's alleged incident should be a red flag to the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics that K-State athletes should not be held up in a higher light than any other K-State student. Breaking the law for any reason is still breaking the law.

Many K-State athletes receive scholarship money as well as other benefits not received by other students. One of their most important roles is to represent the University. When they don't fulfill their responsibilities, we all look bad.

The Collegian has written stories about K-State athletes who have contributed to the community by doing such things as raising money for Special Olympics and volunteering at local elementary schools. But until the athletic department can begin to control all of its athletes, the positive aspects of K-State athletics will continue to be overshadowed by the negative.

Our View, an editorial selected and debated by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board after a consensus opinion is reached. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and students.

Looming graduation brings reflections about college life through what I'm going through. To be sure, it happens to a few people every year. Going down Kansas Highway 177, people might picture themselves coming in the opposite direction, as freshmen, heads chock full of ideas about what college life will be like.

Others might see someone from the past in a song, or sitting outside the K-State Student Union smoking a cigarette. Whatever the case may be, we begin to live with phantoms. They come

All the incidentals of fee payments, finals anxiety or financial stress press behind the wisps of recollection, seen from the corner of the eye under the sun as it sets behind Memorial Stadium. We all wish for simpler times.

The University is a special place. In my life, I will never know such a time of growth and of change. Having nearly completed my student teaching, I envy those high-school seniors about to enter the collegiate lifestyle and feel sorry for those who will miss the experience of drifting to

I wonder if every graduating senior goes the park on a cool October day, cutting class and being completely oblivious to the

> Like every senior, I am somewhat tired of the college lifestyle. It will be nice to be in the work force, earning a steady income, attempting to grab what I can out of life.

> I also know that when I leave, I won't be gone for more than a few months before I start to look forward to the first Cats game in the fall, or miss nights spent at Espresso Royale Caffe, Auntie Mae's Parlor or Rock-A-Belly Deli.

> All in all, college isn't just about studying. Classes are important, but I have always maintained that half of a college education comes not from a room in Bluemont or Denison hall, but outside, mixing with people. Knowledge is nothing without interpersonal experience.

> And so, we all wait for the walk across the stage, sweating underneath a crinkly robe, remembering which hand to take the diploma with, mirroring the same hesitance experienced during high-school graduation.

> I know all of this seems a little melancholy, but that's what I feel like. I know some readers, between bites of biscuit and gravy in the Union, are probably mumbling 'Geeze, this guy's depressing," or, "He needs to just suck it up and take his medicine." Well, all that's most likely true.

> However, I think some of the same people saying that are also those who are clawing at the walls of Anderson Hall in anticipation of their diploma and freedom.

Well, that which we wish for, at times, is not always our salvation. Jean Shepard, in the book "In God We Trust, All Others Pay Cash," equates finding manhood to scrambling beyond a great invisible wall. He says that once one is beyond the wall, nothing is ever the same again. The wall, in short, distorts one's perspective about the past.

I want to pass through the invisible wall of graduation. I'm not going to become one of those alumni who comes back to Aggieville during homecoming and makes a total ass out of himself. (I've already covered that base as an undergraduate.)

won't be so bad. If college has taught me

See you down the road.

Family accounts of Holocaust horrors give meaning to remembrance

I want to tell you a story. This story is about a crime. More than one. It is about hiding in order to save your life and going to bed each night not knowing if this is the night when they will come and get you. It is about having to give your child away because you know that if they find you they will kill you both.

Sounds scary, doesn't it? Well, I didn't read this in a Stephen King novel and this is not about a movie, either. I heard this story from my mother who, unfortunately, was the main character.

My mother was born in Paris, France in February of 1940, not the most appropriate time for a Jewish baby to come to this world.

The life of my mother was in danger even before she was born. My grandma tells me that, while giving birth to my mom, the nurses would go out of the room each time they heard the sound of bombs getting close.

My mother's life was not the normal life of a child her age. She tells a story about one day when her father went out to get some milk for her. My grandma stayed at home with my mother and her father. He was an old guy, very short and with a long white beard. Suddenly, there was a pounding at the door. My grandma knew it was

At first they were only looking for the men. My grandma's first impulse was to protect her father. She hid him on a chair, and he was so short that his feet couldn't reach the floor. She covered his body with sheets and told him to stay quiet and not to move. When the Nazis entered the house, they started looking all over but they didn't find what they were looking for, so they

My grandma had saved her father's life. But she knew the soldiers would be back. When her husband returned, they grabbed what they could carry and left.

Soon after my grandparents fled, the Nazis came back and ransacked their house. It was too late. They were already

The fear of being caught and killed forced my grandparents to make a tough decision. To save my mother's life, they gave her to nuns at a convent. A short time later, they realized it wouldn't make sense for them to survive without my mother. They decided that if they were going to die, they would all die together.

After a long journey across the mountains, my mother, grandparents and great-grandfather crossed into Switzerland where they could stay safe until the war ended. Others in my family were not as My grandmother's sister and brother were killed in concentration camps. Another brother survived. The Allied Forces found him at the end of the war when they reached Auschwitz. In a pile of hundreds of nude corpses at the camp, one soldier saw something moving. It was my grandmother's brother. Although he survived, his body never recovered from the malnutrition he suffered during captivity. He died a few years later.

The Holocaust is not something we talk about often at my home. Actually, I called my mom before writing this to ask her some questions about her life. I realized I did not know much about her childhood. I always avoided touching on this topic. Maybe, it was the hope that not talking about it would make it disappear - like if it never happened. Well, the Holocaust did happen, and it is happening again. In the news, you can see holocausts taking place all over the world.

Some people ask me why we should remember something that happened so long ago. I think the only way to ensure this will not happen in the future is by learning from the lessons of the past. I learned from my mom's story.

Tonight, many will gather to remember all the victims of the Holocaust. These victims included Jews, gypsies, homosexuals and other groups considered undesirable. At 7 p.m. in Union 213, we will make sure the lessons of the past are not forgotten.

"It is taking a while to develop the center," Paulsen said.

"After the center was approved, another committee was established to recommend programs and organizations for the center."

There has not been much publicity about the center. The proposal has been approved, but the programs will not start until a director is appointed, Paulsen said.

"We are in the process of hiring a director," Gerry Posler, professor of agronomy, said.

The basic idea of the center will be to enhance the value of wheat to producers, processors and consumers by developing teams of scientists to tackle problems too large for individuals to handle, he added.

One of the ideas that will be looked at is increasing resistance to disease and insects, which will decrease the need for pesticides.

Increasing the quality of wheat by increasing the protein content by genetic means or management will also be looked into, Paulsen said.

The center will also provide scientific literature for wheat growers. Data will be assembled from past research and made available to wheat scientists.

Another goal is to develop a strategic plan for the wheat industry.

Questions of how much is needed, what kind is needed and the demand for wheat will all be asked and answered, he said

Paulsen said the program will not have a specific building, but will cut across departments and involve people from other states.

Martinez has turnaround year, breaks RBI record

JEREMY KELLEY sports editor

Things sure can change in one year.

New York Yankee first baseman Constantino "Tino" Martinez has found his groove this year in the Yankees' lineup after he shattered Barry Bonds' RBI record for the month of April with 34.

Last year Martinez was forced to try to fill the shoes of Yankee-great Don Mattingly, a seemingly unconquerable quest considering all Mattingly has accomplished in New York: eight gold gloves, a 1985 American League MVP award, 1984 batting champion, hits leader in 1984 and 1986 and the RBI leader in 1985.

But Martinez refuses to accept the comparisons.

"I don't think about it," Martinez said. "What helped a lot was that he and I had the same agent, so I pretty much knew what Don was going to do before he retired."

This ex-Mariner came into the 1996 season with a cloud over his head. It grew bigger as the pressure began to swell as Martinez batted just .200 to start the year last year.

"Last year I tried to do too much too fast, but eventually I slowed down my game," he said. "You pick up pitches a lot quicker. I really pick up a pitch quick this year and can make the necessary adjustment."

But things change. Martinez and the New York Yankees won the 1996 World Series Championship and with that Martinez gained a lot of confidence.

Martinez ended April with 34 RBIs surpassing Bonds' record of 32, set last season. He hit nine homers in April and garnered a .327 batting average. Martinez now leads the AL in RBI's with 49 and is one homer behind Seattle's Ken Griffey Jr.

"I've never had this RBI chance before," Martinez said. 'Credit Bernie, Derek and Cecil for giving me a a lot of chances to get RBIs."

At the beginning of the season, Martinez used a threehomer effort against his former home, the Seattle Kingdome. He stunned pitcher Scott Sanders with a homer hat-trick. Martinez tallied seven RBIs on that night off a three-run shot, a two-run shot and a solo homer before Seattle could find a replacement.

So was Martinez simply trying to hit harder against his

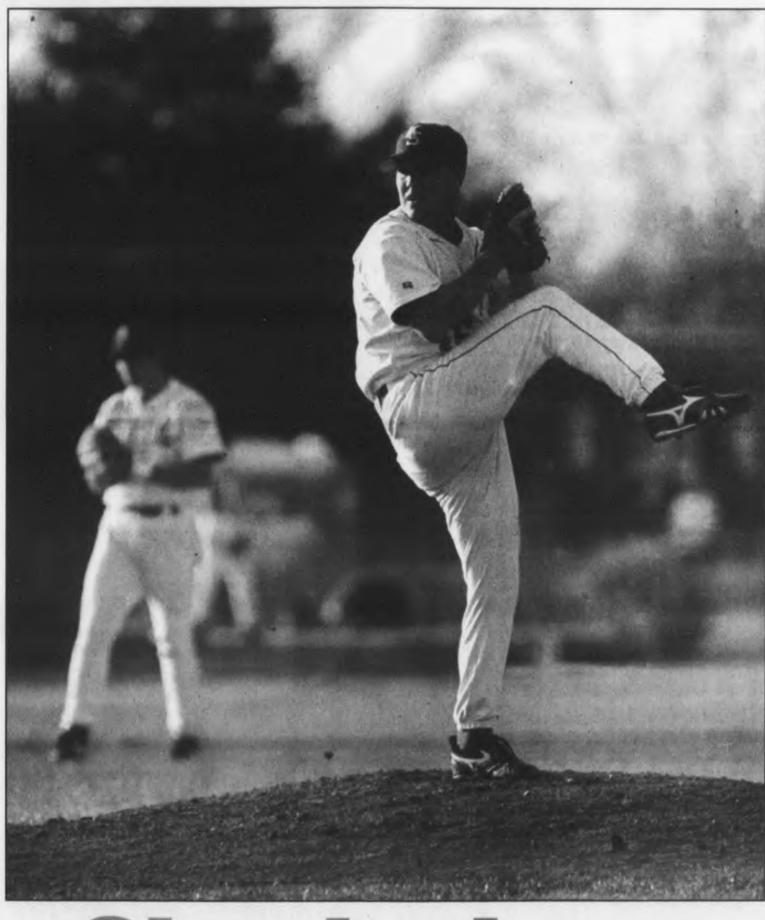

"No, I don't think so," Martinez said. "I don't try and hit any harder against Seattle. He threw those pitches, and I just picked them up and hit them."

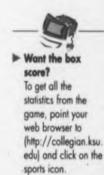

Martinez has used his place in New York to develop his game from third baseman Wade Boggs.

"I learn a lot just by watching his approach to the game," Martinez said. "I am working hard as a ball player. I do have to work hard at my hitting to stay successful and be successful."

But after a little more than a year with the New York Yankee organization Martinez says he is happy in New York and is glad he was offered a chance to play there.

"I was kind of hoping I would get a chance to come here. Me and my wife love New York," he said. "Both teams have great strengths. Seattle's team has a lot more power. We have a lot more line drive hitters and the Yankees have a stronger bullpen."

Shocked Cats' 9th-inning heroics upset Wichita State

BRIAN SMOLLER

If K-State had played like this all year, Wildcats fans would be gawking at a Big 12 title trophy and a possible post-season berth in the College World Series.

The Wildcats, fresh off their first Big 12 series sweep of the season against one intrastate rival, Kansas, notched its 30th win of the season over another interstate rival, downing Wichita State, 4-3, Tuesday night at Frank Myers Field.

The Shockers, ranked No. 16 by Collegiate Baseball and No. 20 by Baseball America, came into the game with their ace, Ben Thomas 7-1, 3.79 ERA, and found the Wildcats a more than formidable opponent

The Cats came back from an early 3-0 deficit in dramatic fashion, led by junior third baseman Josh Marn, who went 2-4 with three RBIs, including the game winner in the bottom of the ninth.

Todd Fereday, who led off for the sixth straight game, continued his dream week by leading off the ninth with his second hit of the game, a double on the first pitch by Shocker freshman Greg Bauer was then lifted by head Shocker coach Gene Stephenson, and sophomore Marc Bluma, younger sibling of Royals pitcher Jamie Bluma, was brought in to close the door on the Cats.

Marn punched the first offering of Bluma toward the right side, getting a lucky high bounce that went over the first baseman Pat Magness' head and into right field.

Fereday was waved home from second by head coach Mike Clark, who waved so hard he pulled a muscle in his leg and fell

"It happened on the second time I waved," Clark said. "It felt like somebody from the bullpen hit me with a ball. I tried to get up to see if Todd had scored and it felt worse. I thought I was shot and I looked down for some blood. I found out later it was a pulled muscle.'

Junior catcher Yancy Ayres also provided some heroics for the Cats. Ayres tied the contest in the bottom of the seventh with his second home run of the season, a titanic blast that brought the 4,212 Wildcats faithful to their feet.

"I just looked at the fastball and tried to stay away from the curveball," Ayres said.

The Shockers jumped early on Wildcat starter Brandon Peck, who was making his first start of the season, scoring three runs in the first two innings

All three runs for the Shockers were a result of lead off walks

After walking the lead-off batter in the fifth, Clark went to the bullpen summoning senior Jon Oiseth, who nabbed the only Wildcat victory against the Shockers last season.

Oiseth completed the game, allowing only one hit through four innings of work. With the win he evened his record at 2-2 ble by Jason Bichelmeyer. Ayres popped-out and Garrett Bell fouled out before Fereday walked, bringing Marn to the plate. Marn promptly deposited Thomas' first pitch into right field where it got away from the right fielder and rolled to the wall, giving Marn a triple and the Cats a chance.

K-State scored its first two runs in the fifth after a lead off dou-

The Shockers had a chance to go ahead in the top of the ninth, when after two outs, Bell dropped a fly ball in center field and Oiseth walked the next batter.

Ayres again proved his worth by throwing out the base runners as the Shockers tried a double steal.

"The guy at third was going to be safe, but I knew I had a chance at the guy at second," Ayres said.

Although both Heath Schesser and Scott Poepard had two hits each, for a rare time all season, they did not factor in any of the Wildcats' runs as Marn and Ayres stepped up.

"It's the best," said Schesser referring to Marn and Ayres' efforts. "Josh had been kinda down lately and, I don't know why. He's been hitting the ball hard, but right at people.'

Marn spoke highly of his efforts after the game as well. "I've just been battling' all year and it finally paid off," Marn said. "Luck finally fell my way tonight."

After the game, Clark reflected on the game, sitting in a chair on the field with his leg propped up and iced.

"I'm just proud of these guys," he said. "This is what college baseball is all about."

Clark pointed to Oiseth as having great pitches all year, but it all came together for him against the Shockers. "He's had trouble with the strike zone before," Clark said. "But Mike (Hensley) worked with him and changed some things and he had great stuff tonight." With the victory, the Cats improve to 30-22 and become the eighth team in school history to win 30 games. The win was also

Introduction to sports world of journalism truly amazing

Not with a bang, but a whisper.

This borrowed thought probably best describes my introduction to the world of collegiate journalism and, more specifically, the Collegian. After numerous attempts at cornering the editor and bludgeoning him with my résumé, my acceptance onto the staff came with a lot less fanfare. With one accidental but well-timed phone call, I was welcomed as the new cog to the sports reporting machine.

As time stepped toward the finish line of column writing, I cracked open a tasty beverage, chomped down on a fat cigar and looked back at the opportunities and events that affected me sports-wise in year No. 1 in Squirrel City, USA. While the times haven't always been funktafied, the journalistic year in whole has provided me with numerous goods that helped shape my ideals and mold my walk as a Wildeat.

Outside the already mentioned critter overload, the one event that caught my attention immediately was the aura surrounding the football program. In the height of the season, there wasn't one person approached for questioning who didn't have an opinion on

K-State's ments to Jon at (jkb2004@ksu.edu). bowl position, when Chris Canty would be selected or whether Powercat tattoos made suitable Christmas

At the heart of this phenomenon was the weekly press conference with Coach Spyder. Strangely similar to ancient Roman gladiator duels, reporters from all areas would brandish their weapons of tape recorders and long-winded questions in hopes of reeling in hefty quotes that could slay their rival paper.

I was baptized into this journalistic grudge match quickly and with each question became more adapted to the setting. From these experiences I gained inside knowledge and column material galore. Each new week opened another corridor, and witnessing Manhattan's gridiron madness up close provided me with a first-time exposure to the big time.

While the Collegian badge gave me access to the purple kings of the city, it also opened my eyes to the hidden realm of K-State athletics. Digging deep into Sports Information's playbook, I found teams with stories not often mentioned in the Collegian's ink.

The rugby team, which plays weekend matches out at Tuttle Creek, had quite a history behind it, and a member of the hockey club informed me of the traveling and sacrificing of dollars necessary to feed their love for the ice. While these two clubs are only the tip of the iceberg, they helped me realize that the Transformers, the 1980s cartoon icons, were right: There is more than meets the eye.

The end of my Collegian recollections didn't take place until two nights ago at Frank Myers Field. Sitting behind home plate, working a mouthful of sunflower seeds, I noticed that all of my ventures to different athletic events contained one similar element - atmosphere.

Every complex and stadium I had attended was infused with something that separated it from the rest. KSU Stadium reeks of this. On any crowded Saturday you'll be surrounded by purple paraphernalia and numerous other displays that help separate the stadium from others.

To a lesser degree, Bramlage Coliseum contains a cave-like setting that stakes its claim. I didn't notice this at less attended games, but after the KU contest early in January, the element was recognized. Looking from court level into the crowd and seeing a steep stacked section of fans made me feel like there was a medical examination at the heart of the attention.

Myers Field was the capstone to my atmospheric awakening. On a warm summer night, the pine trees hovering over the walls punctuated the field and affirmed its identity. With new improvements coming next season, Myers Field should continue to gain atmosphere.

With my final jig on the keyboard, the finale to a long season of columns is near conclusion. Within this column, I've encountered enlightenment, criticism, bonding and knowledge from much of the K-State masses. However, I won't strut away with a plea for understanding, a longwinded goodbye or any other commonly adopted strategies. Instead, I'll bag up this beast by stating something I should have argued long ago:

Mugshots come out as completely separate personas, as the giddy caffeine addict above will testify. With that said, I've gotten the final burden off my chest. Now it's time to partake in some farewells of other sorts.

On the way out of Manhattan for the summer, students should stop by their local banks. Although the balance might be low after the post-finals celebration, looking at options for summer savings might help students earn a little more cash for next semester.

Most students are down to Ramen noodles for lack of funds. For the thrifty students with some money left over, here are some suggestions for adding to the cash stash.

For students with money that they won't need until next semester, a certificate of deposit is a good choice Tom Giller, retail banking manager at Commerce Bank, said.

"A CD issued for at least 91 days with at least $2,500 will earn about 4.2 percent," Giller said. "This would be a good idea for someone with some college savings left over after the semester. This would give the best yield."

For students with money who might need to access it during the summer, a money market account is another

"A transaction account like this will allow them to write limited checks out of their account, but it will also gain interest, about 3.2 percent for a balance from $0 to $10,000," Giller said.

There are also interest checking accounts available, Giller said. They have a lower tolerance on the minimum balance, but they gain less interest.

For graduating seniors there are also some options to think about for those future more than minimum-wage pay

"First, look at the company you'll be working for," Giller said. "If they offer a 401K plan, then they will usually match the percentage that you are having deducted from your gross wages. These are good plans and can have real good returns.

Mutual funds can also be a good investment, Giller said. Stocks, bonds and annuities are also some slightly more risky investments.

"Starting out with a savings and investment plan is smart," Giller said. "Just $50 or $100 a month is a good start on growing your savings."

Depending on savings needs, a trip to the bank might earn students a little more than a coffee-can savings plan.

Vawter moments later, warning them that Dies and Vasiljevic were on their Kelley said he wasn't worried, and he argued with Stewart, who said he was scared and wanted to leave immediately. As they were discussing the situation, someone knocked on the door and Stewart locked himself in Kelley's bed-

Kelley said Matthews was at the door asking to see Stewart. She said she had a class with him, but when Kelley asked her what class, she didn't know.

Kelley saw movement on the stairs, and looking around the corner, he saw Dies and Vasilievic.

"I said 'Hey, what's up?' and Manny's like, 'Where's your boy?"" Kelley said. "Then he just walks in, and I'm not gonna stop him. He's like three times my size."

Dies, who is 6'9" and 235 pounds, brushed past Kelley, who is 5'8" and 150 pounds. Kelley said that Dies shouted, "Where is he? Get out here, bitch."

Stewart, who is 6'1" and 170 pounds, hid in Kelley's room, where he said he found the phone and called his fraternity. Kappa Sigs piled into cars and headed to the house.

"There's strength in numbers, you know?" Stewart said.

Meanwhile, Dies had discovered the locked door and was screaming for Stewart to come out. He allegedly started to kick the door, and he allegedly knocked it down, destroying the lock and the door jamb.

"I opened the window and got out," Stewart said. "I'm walking out on the roof, and I hear them get into the room. I look around and there's nowhere to hide on the roof, so I jumped off and tried to grab the gutter to break my fall, but I ended up just slicing my hand."

Stewart's downstairs neighbor, Michelle Baker, estimated that he jumped about 12 to 14 feet from the second floor. Stewart was barefoot.

"I was in my room and Todd's living room is right above me, and I heard people running up the stairs and I heard a lot of screaming and yelling and cussing, and he was demanding to know where Todd was," Baker, senior in advertising, < B> < B>said.

Baker was calling the police as Stewart ran to a neighbor's house to do the same

After Stewart jumped, everyone in the apartment ran downstairs and out on the lawn. Kelley said Vasiljevic was yelling, "This is our university. This is our fucking university."

By the time the police arrived at 12:30 a.m., about 15 Kappa Sigs had arrived at the house, and Dies, Vasiljevic and Matthews were gone, Kelley said.

Police took statements from Kelley,

Stewart and their friend Monte Lamond, who had been visiting the apartment, but Kelley said the police told him that they could do nothing because Dies and his friends were gone. About five minutes after the police left, Dies and his companions returned, Kelley said. Lamond called 911, and a police car stationed one block away showed up almost immediately, he said. It was just after 1 a.m.

The police questioned them and let them go, Kelley said.

Right now, investigators are looking into the allegations.

'The case has been assigned to an investigator, and he will contact the victims and anyone else who was there and the suspects and get their side of the story," Crosby said.

If investigators find enough evidence, Lt. Buddy Mays said, they will forward it to the county attorney, who will decide whether there is probable cause for an arrest. If he decides there is, he will then request a warrant from a

"The College of Engineering has grown from a smaller and less refined operation to something very sophisticated and the largest college of engineering in Kansas," Wefald said. "Don Rathbone deserves a lot of the credit for bringing the college into the modern world."

Alumni donations to the college have helped build one of the finest facilities in the world, Durland Hall. Phase II of Durland has recently been renamed Rathbone Hall.

Money for scholarships and research has substantially increased. Research has increased from $500,000 in 1973 to more than $20 million. Enrollment alone has increased from 949 undergraduate and 150 graduate students to 2,650 and 500, respectively.

A recent five-year fundraising effort through Wefald's Essential Edge campaign has netted more than $33 million for K-State engineering education.

Last Saturday night, Rathbone was celebrated by his friends at a reception at the WEST HELENA, Ark. - An explosion rocked a chemical packaging plant near the Mississippi River on Thursday and three firefighters were killed while battling a pesticide-fueled blaze that followed.

Sixteen people were injured in the explosion at BPS Inc., state police spokesman Wayne Jordan said.

The area of the explosion was inaccessible hours after the fire, and Jordan said the number of casualties could rise.

"We saw white smoke, heard an explosion that sounded like a sound boom when an airplane breaks the barrier, and then we saw a lot of fire," said Vickie Bolden, who works at Helena Chemical, a quarter-mile

"The flames were so high - 150 feet, then the smoke turned black, and it was dark from then," she said.

"The fumes would burn your nose, it smelled bad, like ammonia, where it would take your breath," she said.

The chemicals involved were azinphosmethyl, methyomyl and thiophante, all considered poisonous, according to Becky

"It was like a thunderbolt that landed outside the building," she said. "It smells pitiful. It's a strong odor. Very strong."

The industrial park where the plant is located was also evacuated and others in Helena and West Helena, with populations totaling about 18,000, were told to stay inside and shut their windows and doors.

Azinphosmethyl is an insecticide that is more toxic to insects than it is to humans and thiophante is a fungicide used to control parasitic worms in animals, said Donald R. Bobbitt, a professor of chemistry at University of Arkansas in Fayetteville. He had no information on methyomyl.

Options exist to relieve finals week stress

Finals week can be a stressful time for students. Some people on and off campus are trying to help students cope.

Most greek houses implement 24 hours of quiet time during finals week with the exception of snack breaks in the evening when people can kick back, take a mental break and be loud.

"It gives people time to get out of the room and have a snack and get away from their studies for a bit and get a little crazy," Pete Sheidler, sophomore in park resource management and a Delta Sigma Phi member, said.

"If I had silence for a whole week I'd go nuts. It's nice to turn your stereo up and goof around for two hours and get a little out of off your system and then get back to studying. You need a break to blow off some steam and be able to start over fresh," he said. Although students finish finals at different times, students say there are still reminders that being courteous is still important for those who are not yet done.

"Twenty-four quiet hours lets people know that just because they're done not everybody else is," said Brad Laubhan, junior in business and a Theta Xi, said, "If you're going to be loud, drunk and crazy you can leave the house."

dents during finals week.

All three dining centers will have a snack night from 8 to 9 Sunday night and will provide extra snacks for residents to take out of the dining centers for late night snack munchies during finals week. Fit Course tents will also be put up during the week to inform students about time management, the effects of caffeine, stress and other health related issues.

"We see ourselves as being a home away from home," Barbara Scheule, administrative dietitian, said. "We are a source of support and encouragement during this stressful time. The dining centers are not the only ones within the dorms with special activities planned for finals week. Hall governing boards, along with individual resident assistants, will do a number of stress-relief breaks to break up the There will be watermelon fights, balloon fights and other games. There will also be snack breaks in the different halls and "I think it helps everybody prepare for finals by letting off some steam, getting away from the rooms and books for a little bit," Andy Fink, residence coordinator, said. "It's important to just smile, laugh and to keep everything in perspective.

Farrell Library to open new entrance May 19

Farrell Library will welcome patrons through a new set of doors beginning May 19.

Currently an emergency entrance is being used for access to the library because of construction that began three years ago. "It'll be a big relief. There are a lot of people that are excited about moving in and being able to provide the services they have wanted to but couldn't because of the construction," Jan Crow, marketing and public relations coordinator for Farrell Library, said.

The new entrance will be located south of the current entrance between Denison Hall and the library.

Crow said she thinks the entrance will benefit the students because a reference desk will be located at the new entrance.

"For the patron, they will have an entrance where someone can tell them everything they need to know and go from there. It will be much more efficient for the new students or one who isn't familiar with the library," Crow said. A second entrance is set to open behind Denison and Holton halls in the fall. It will provide access to an area that will be open 24 hours a day and will house a study area, computer terminals and a book drop. The study area will seat 200 people, and it will be the only area in the library where food and beverages will be allowed.

Crow said she hopes these changes make students feel more comfortable.

"Our goal is to make the library more user-friendly," Crow said. "When the construction is finally finished, it will be nice to tell someone where a book is and have it be

P VID FAIRBANKS

May is Mental Health Month, and with finals week right around the corner, practicing good mental health might help with those stressful exams.

Marilyn Schreiner, mental health resources division director, said during finals week, a number of factors can contribute to stress

"Finals week causes stress because it's out of everyone's normal routine. It also comes at the same time when the weather gets beautiful, students are saying goodbye to their friends for the summer and people are in the process of moving."

She said practicing good coping skills will help with the added stress. Eating right, staying organized and simple relaxation techniques can help make the week run smoothly.

"It's more effective to spend 10 minutes being quiet and meditating than it is to cram when the information isn't even sinking in," she said.

Fred Newton, director of University Counseling Services, said cramming for finals and pulling all-nighters isn't an effective way to study.

"Often times when people stay up all night studying, they'll crash the next day at the test. Even if you know the material, when fatigue sets in, the amount of information you can recall tends to decline."

He said the two most important things to do during finals week are to stay organized and, in spite of the rush, keep a state of balance. Students can do this by maintaining some of their normal activities, like sufficient sleep and regular exercise.

Another important stress-relieving tool is studying in the right environment, he said. Different environments create different stimuli

"When people study on their bed, they usually end up falling asleep. When people study too long in the same place, they tend to get bored or fatigued. Often times it's a good idea to study somewhere for a while and then change locations," he said.

Although finals week does tend to create added stress, it's not the only time people should practice good mental health, Schreiner said. The main cause of all stress

Any change in someone's life, even a positive change, can cause added stress, she said. Other stress-causing factors are physical disabilities or poor physical

She said physical health and mental health go hand-in-hand.

"It's tough to treat mental-health problems when you're not taking care of yourself. At the same time, when someone has a high-stress life and doesn't take care of their mental health, then it's harder to treat their physical problems with traditional medical approaches," she said. Schreiner said Pawnee Mental Health Service in Manhattan offers prevention, education and treatment services for those seeking help. Pawnee Mental Health Service gives presentations to clubs and organizations and has a number of pamphlets and fliers available, she said. It also offers treatment and counseling for various mental-health problems, such as anxiety, depression, sub-

It's time to write your own editorial or a little relaxation and reading enjoyment on this, the last day of classes this semester, we decided to give you, gentle reader, a mad lib. So, grab a friend and get some suggestions together for words to plug into this faux letter home. Have a friend tell you the parts of speech, and you fill them in without looking at the other words.

Have a great finals week!

Dear Mom and Dad,

Today is the last day of (NOUN). Through all of the (NOUN), we have certainly (VERB) ed a lot.

I got so (ADJECTIVE) in Aggieville that I (VERB) in front of a win-

The next day, I read this piece of (NOUN) in the Collegian and then listened to "A Purple (NOUN)" and they completely (VERB) ed it.

I'm getting very (ADJECTIVE) about the rising costs of (NOUN) in the K-State Student Union. As Tom Asbury said, "I'm frustrated and (ADJECTIVE) ed off!"

I'm starting to get the Fear, too, Mom and Dad. I went to a party and got really (ADJECTIVE) ed because there was (NOUN) in the punch. What really freaked me out was when (PROPER NOUN) showed up and kicked in my (NOUN).

I'm thinking about running for Student Senate, Mom and Dad.

But, don't worry - I won't (VERB) and drive. I want to get more involved in the University because, as President Jon Wefald said, we have many great (PLURAL NOUN) and (PLURAL NOUN), even more than Harvard or Princeton universities - even with all the squirrel (PLURAL NOUN) dripping on the sidewalks. I'll need more money next semester, Mom and Dad. I don't know where it all goes - probably to (PROPER NOUN) for more periodicals and jour-reached. The editorial board consists of Collegian editors and students.

Our View, an editorial selected and debated by a majority of the editorial board, is written by the editorial board after a consensus opinion is Saying good-byes, thanks for past year

Now, where did that semester go? It was right here a

Wow, time flies when you're burning in the pits of hell, doesn't it? This is that point in the year when it's time to look back, acknowledge the mistakes made in the last few months and take pride in your accomplishments (if any).

That doesn't take long for me - retrospect is not one of my callings. But I go that extra mile for you, gentle readers. I can adapt; I play that kind of a defense. In our department, and I'm sure it's the same in yours, there are several people who, through hard work, wellcrafted plans or deals made with unholy entities, are finally graduating and moving on.

There are several more who are simply moving on to greener pastures, finding a path to happiness that doesn't necessarily lead to a diploma. The important part about this is that they're leaving, and as hit me a few weeks ago, despite all our best-laid plans and promises to the contrary, we will probably never see most of them to Ken at (sigma7@ksu.edu).

This managed to get me down for a bit - me, Mr. Anti-Social, Mr. People-Take-Up-Oxygen-Which-I-Could-Be-Using getting bummed by a perfectly natural progression of people to places where they'd rather be.

Well, aside from being obviously selfish and oddly considerate, it was stupid. Change is an integral part of growth, and there's no reason to mourn the migration of friends and colleagues from north-central Kansas. (It's much easier to relate to if you're one of the ones migrating, I understand.)

But it's important to recognize how fortunate we were to make these friends in the first place. I don't feel as bad for letting these people squirm away. I keep thinking about those who are leaving K-State without my ever knowing them.

I only know a fraction of the student body, and yet in that fraction there is stunning diversity of opinion and personality and chemistry. There are many more who I could've met who would have expanded that KEN WELLS is a graduate student diversity even more.

> These are the people we pass on the sidewalk every day, waiting until we get within that magic three-step range, when we look up (after pretending not to notice them heretofore) and at best nod, maybe smile (in my case, maybe grin slightly), possibly even say "Hi." And that's it.

> I'm not suggesting we start all sitting down on the sidewalks and chatting and getting to know each other. That'd be insane in the membrane. We'd all get killed by bicyclists or a kamikaze Cushman or killer squirrels or some such nonsense. No, nothing that specific. Just a general attitude which this campus is already rather skilled - say "hi" and play it by ear.

The friends leaving are at least leaving as friends - they could have left without our ever knowing them, and that would be the worst loss. Better to have known and lost than ... no, let's not desecrate more literature than we need to in one semester. For one, it's overly romantic. For two, it's a sloppy alteration. For three, I can't think of an impressively catchy way to end it, so what's the point?

To all of you making some DRIAN FLEMING/Collegion happy trails of your own, have fun and thanks for being here.

To those of you sticking around for a semester or two more, we'll be seeing you. A brief indulgence, if I may, to thank certain people for making this semester bearable.

Many thanks to Kevin and Kim for giving a deranged and deluded writer a shot. Thanks to Doc Fedder, best advisor a guy could hope for.

A lot of thanks to those of you who wrote in, even the ones who didn't agree (if you'd all agreed with the marriage column, then I'd be worried).

Thanks to Cory for insuring my eventual survival. Many thanks and congrats to Jill, Erin and Dan, my '97 classmates. Massive thanks to the Collegian staff for being friendly, helpful and somewhat odd.

See you all on the other side. Moo.

I'm sitting around my apartment with my roommate Reverend Dave the other day, killing time with a wide-open living room window letting in the tree-diffused sunshine, cool afternoon breezes and other sights and sounds of an unstoppable spring

Manhattan. We're in that scholarly netherzone right after getting off campus from class, but before committing to the night's activities.

Maybe we'll just study tonight. It's about time that 20-pager got some attention, anyway.

gaze around at the crayon drawings and poetry coloring the walls, left there by friends and guests from times past, as the topic of conversation moves to Descartes, 17th-century French philosopher and mathematician.

Above the couch the mural-like countenance of a Great Old Poet Man, some crayon cross between T.S. Eliot and Henry Kissinger, oversees the room while the words "Pledge Allegiance to the Resistance!!" rest in a thought balloon above his head.

The question before us is, did Descartes refer to the evil genius, or did he call it the malignant demon, in his First Meditation? Pantera, Texas' cheesiest musical export, hammers away as we discuss.

"I think, therefore I am" is Descartes' most famous maxim. We've all heard it before. He arrives at this idea by posing the question: What if we cannot trust what we perceive, what if what we sense as the real world in all its aspects isn't real at all, but like a dream? What if some sinister agency, some evil genius or malignant demon, was set forth to purposefully and secretly deceive us and our senses

No matter how powerful this being would be, "he can never cause me to be nothing so long as I think I am something,' according to Descartes. We might be deceived, but at least we do exist, and that is for certain.

"By demons, be driven By demons, be driven! Beckon the call, beckon the call ...

I interrupt my discussion with the good Reverend to relate how I was almost set aflame at a Pantera concert in Dallas.

I find two things about Todd Stewart's self-created dilemma hilariously funny. First, despite a semester full of self-aggrandizing articles, and plenty of machismo-filled references to standing up for what he believes in, when the music began to play, Stewart was in the back room cowering in fear

What happened to the Todd Stewart who wrote: (referring to Jason Whitlock, Kansas City Star columnist) "I was so looking forward to our meeting, but you failed to step up to the plate and face the music." (Collegian, Monday, March 3, 1997) "When I was confronted with the (Collegian, Monday, April 28, 1997) Stewart should not be subject to physical violence - and it should be noted that he was not - but by what other measure can we establish "backing up their words" when as a writer he offered nothing but unsubstantiated opinions from a protected position? Hopefully, the scare he received was traumatic enough that he'll keep it in mind the next time he feels like having some harmless fun at someone else's

McVeigh's attorneys tried to block the introduction of the letter, which makes a passing McVeigh criticism of the FBI's shooting of a white separatist's family in Ruby Ridge, Idaho. It also makes reference to McVeigh being on a secret list in Brussels and lauds the courage of the patriots who signed the Declaration of Independence.

The letter says he expected his health to start deteriorating in a year or two - there was no explanation why and says: "I might as well do some good when I can be 100 effective."

"Hell, you only live once," it says. "I know and you know it's better to burn' out than rot away in some nursing home.

This was the second letter McVeigh was said to have sent shortly before the April 19, 1995, bombing that spoke of his changing attitude. Jennifer McVeigh testified that her brother wrote that his anti-government fervor had moved beyond the propaganda stage and "was now in the action stage."

The latest letter is signed the desert rat and it makes reference to a desert wind making it difficult to write. Prosecutors say McVeigh, a Gulf War veteran, was in Arizona at the time.

The letter appeared to be a response to an earlier letter or conversation with Strider. Contacted at her home in Caro, Mich., Strider said she couldn't comment because she has been subpoenaed to testify.

Also unclear was who "the bastards" were. Prosecutors contend McVeigh was driven to bomb the Oklahoma City federal building by rage about the government sieges on Waco and Ruby Ridge.

McVeigh, 29, could get the death penalty if convicted of murder and conspiracy in the fruck bombing that killed 168 people and injured hundreds, the deadliest act of terrorism on U.S. soil.

Final column gives parting shots from world of sports

Well, this is it, the last column of the semester. Drum roll please.

Now is the time to look back fondly at all the hard work the Collegian staff, myself included, has put into this paper in the past 16 weeks.

Now is the time to panic about all the classes we have missed because we were putting together this paper.

I really wish I had some sort of mission statement to share or some sort of sentimental drivel to deliver, but I do not. I am just glad this semester is winding down.

It has been quite an experience writing this column. Never before have I had the opportunity to share my ideas with so many people. You agreed with me some of the time

(I have the angry e-mails to prove it), but I hope you read my work and enjoyed it.

Quite simply, that is just about the only thing I wanted to take away from this semester - to know I entertained and amused a few readers (myself included).

Writing this final column, however, is about as much fun as pulling teeth, so I do not think I will be entertaining or amusing very many. I am a desert of ideas. I am dry as a bone.

With that said, I think I will take the low road and make some silly, off-thewall predictions (Do not run to your bookie after I share these puppies.).

How is this: Chicago Cubs, 1997 World Series Champs. Chicago Bulls, national champs. Todd Stewart, forgot-

Some are more likely than others, I admit I realize I could take this moment to rant about Stewart and Manny Dies like the rest of Manhattan, but there is no sense in beating a dead horse. It is the last paper of the semester, and there is nothing more to be said. Frankly, I would like to forget the whole issue. With that Just as I love this issue out of the profession. Where way, I really else can you rave think I have about sports and said my piece actually think somethis semester. I body is paying have over-anaattention? lyzed the Cubs, belittled the and Chiefs prayed for the Royals, but the truth remains that I love them all - just as I love this profession. Where else can you rave about sports and actually think somebody is paying attention? My brain might just be a little foggy, but I hope somebody out there is paying attention. This funny thing known as journalism is something I am still learning. It is something I might not ever perfect, but with this column as my witness, I

A few people this semester were impressed with my efforts.

Your reflective style in your comparisons, your ability to articulate your cleverly defined points clearly and your willingness to communicate your ideas and opinions in a humorous way was quite impressive to me," one person e-mailed me.

Still others were not as pleased. "You either need to change your attitude or stop writing such shitty columns in our University newspaper. You're almost as bad as Todd Stewart," another wrote.

This type of work is a no-win situation. I think anything where an opinion is imparted is a walking time bomb. There is no way to please everybody all of the time (or anybody any of the time, for that matter). It does not bother me, though. I would not want to do this for a living if it did.

The idea that someone out there is always going to be displeased with me only motivates me to go above and beyond to reach them. Only when I have exhausted all my resources and they are still not happy with my writing should I be disappointed.

Even then, it does not really matter what they think, as long as I am happy with myself. I think I am happy So blah, blah, blah. Thanks for the memories and yadda, yadda, yadda. I am done. These are my opinions, and I'm stickin' to 'em.

Riley wins coach of year award for 3rd time

ASSOCIATED PRESS

COCONUT GROVE, Fla. - Pat Riley smiled as he held the trophy named for a man who once snubbed him. The Red Auerbach Trophy goes to the NBA coach of the year. Riley won the honor for the third time Thursday.

"You talk about somebody not speaking to somebody else on an elevator - which I've been accused of," Riley said with a chuckle. "I got on an elevator once with Red when I was the coach of the Lakers and he was the general manager of the Celtics, and I could have been invisible.

'The Lakers and Celtics - bad blood there.' But there's a bond of success linking Riley and Auerbach, who coached nine Boston teams to the NBA

Riley joins Don Nelson as the only coaches to win the Auerbach Trophy three times. And Riley has done it in

He was coach of the year with Los Angeles in 1990 and with the New York Knicks in 1993. This season he led the Miami Heat to their first division title and into the second round of the playoffs for the first time in their nine-year

Another challenge looms. Riley's team trails the Knicks going into Friday's Game 2 in their best-of-seven series.

"He's the hardest-working man in basketball," Heat forward P.J. Brown said. "Nobody predicted us to do anything. We were supposed to be at the bottom of our division, battling to make the playoffs, and we won 61 games. It's a deserved award."

Riley received 69 of 115 votes from a panel of sports writers and sportscasters. Charlotte's Dave Cowens finished second with 22 votes, and Utah's Jerry Sloan was

"These things are residual rewards of the team winning," Riley said. "Our team has simply done an incredible job this year at winning games and probably doing something that a lot of people didn't expect."

The Heat won just 32 games the year before Riley arrived in 1995, and only one player - Keith Askins remains from the roster he inherited. This season Miami has been widely regarded as an overachieving team, with minimum-salary players such as Isaac Austin and Voshon Lenard making key contributions.

"It's been a lot of fun watching this team grow," Riley said. "We have some young players who have developed and some veterans who have played well."

Riley still has more championship rings than Auerbach Trophies. He won four titles in his first seven years with the Lakers, the most recent coming in 1988.

But Riley said he's a better coach now. "Three or four years into my career, when people called me Coach I was almost embarrassed by it," he said. "I hadn't paid my dues. I really didn't have any idea what it was like to coach. I had great players that won games, which allowed me to keep my job, and eventually I think I learned how to coach."

day after an emotional upset over Wichita State, the Cats suffered a bit of a letdown Wednesday night, losing 8-0 at the hands of Steve Foral and the Shockers at Eck Stadium in "A lot of people got satisfied with that, and we might've been just a little too relaxed," said senior second baseman Todd Fereday. "But, I'm not using it as an excuse."

After successfully getting to ace Ben Thomas Tuesday night, the Cats had their hands full with Foral, who improved to 10-3 and lowered his ed over to Erich Bryan and Greg Dunright. All three combined to hold the Cats to only three hits. "He was dominant," said senior first baseman Jason Bichelmeyer. "Nobody got to hit the ball the five innings he was Fereday, who led off again for the Cats, agreed with Bichelmeyer's assessment of Foral's pitching performance. "I've known him a while, and that's the best I've seen him throw," he said. Jason Wells absorbed the loss for the Cats, allowing five runs, four of them earned on two home runs, in five innings,

The only highlight of the game for the Cats came in the bottom half of the eighth inning, when head coach Mike Clark was tossed disputing a alleged bad call at the plate.

According to the players, a throw by senior Scott Poepard to home was on line, and Paul Cranford tagged the runner out. The umpire called that he was safe, prompting Clark to make Clark, still on only one good leg after pulling a muscle in his right calf Tuesday night, hobbled out of the dugout and was quickly sent off.

"You have to give the guy a break," Bichelmeyer said. "He may come out waddling to home plate, but the umpire just can't talk to him like that."

Wichita State improved to 45-13 on the season, while the Cats dropped to 30-23.

K-State will try to rebound after their first loss in 10 days against Oral Roberts in the final series of the season.

The Golden Eagles, who the Cats defeated 11-1 on March 16 in the Oral Roberts tournament, visit the friendly confines of Frank Myers Field this weekend.

While the loss drops the Wildcats below the possibility of tying the best win mark under Clark, and it prevents him from winning his 300th career game at K-State this season, the seniors who will play in their final home series want to make it special. "I just wished it meant more," Bichelmeyer said. "Instead of it being for the post-season, it's just finishing on a good note." Fereday agreed, saying that a post-season berth is what the Cats had hoped for at the beginning of the year, but despite not achieving it, the season still ended up well.

"We just have to accept our fate," he said. "All in all, I'm happy with the way it went." As for next year, Bichelmeyer said he had no idea what he would do, but he said he might possibly coach or play inter-

Fereday, who closed the season hotter than any other Cat, remains hopeful about the upcoming draft, and looks to make a name for himself on the fields of the major leagues like he did

"This weekend is the final home series for me, and basically I just want to go out and play hard and have a good showing in my final game," Fereday said. "There's really no record I can get, but I just want to go out and have fun and leave a name for

Wamego couple spend time raising horses, writing about them

At a young 76-years-old, some might call him a crazy old fool for keeping the pace he does, but anyone with just a little bit of horse sense would understand how Paul Mattson is just living out his dream - a horse-lover's dream.

Mattson, a 1953 K-State graduate, is an expert thoroughbred horse-breeder by trade, but he could also be called a journalist, an editor and a farmer. These titles would also fit his wife Andrea, as they both spend their time breeding horses, writing about horses and studying horse pedigrees.

The Mattsons are self-employed as both horse-breeders at their Big Ten Ranch in Wamego and publishers at Premier Publishing. The job combination requires a grueling, around the clock schedule, but turns out a perfect match as both Paul and Andrea love nothing more than just horsin' around.

"I guess I just about got it made," Paul said with a grin. "I can go in the morning and see my horses. Then I can come back to the office and read or write about them.

The Mattson's are well-known throughout the country for their knowledge of horse bloodlines. It was this similarity in interests that brought them together originally.

"I lived in Washington at the time," Andrea said. "Paul and I got to talking quite a bit after he asked me for some pedigree information, and we found out we were so much alike. I finally came to Kansas to meet him and then pretty soon we got married."

Paul responded to this with a chuckle, "I just liked her 'cause she could dig fence holes and plant railroad ties."

Their marriage in 1990 not only unified their love for each other, it also brought together a wealth of knowledge and a love for horses, and they eventually started Premier Publishing.

'She and I have both written books about horses," Paul said, "so it was kind of natural for us to start publishing our own stuff."

The publishing side of the job goes hand-in-hand with the breeding side. The primary book they print is an annual breeder's directory called "The Stallion Finder. Paul said with his 17 years as a livestock reporter at the Kansas City Daily Drovers Telegram, and both his and Andrea's knowledge of current stallions, "The Stallion Finder" was a natural off-

"No one has really done this before, at least not to this extent," Andrea said. "It took many hours of research and writing for just the two of us to put this thing together, but we sure think it's worth it. Besides publishing books, the Mattson's have also created a website where they have posted pictures and listings of their own breeding stock as well as anyone who wishes to list their horses there.

Kansas City man arrested; accused of breaking into convent, raping 61-year-old nun

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Charges were filed Thursday against a Kansas City man accused of breaking into a convent and raping a 61-year-old nun, officials said

Jerry D. Owen, 39, was charged in Jackson County with first-degree burglary, first-degree assault, sexual abuse, forcible rape and armed criminal action.

The incident happened at the northeast Kansas City convent house of the Daughters of Charity of St. Vincent De Paul, an order based in France.

Owen was held on $500,000 bond, with arraignment scheduled for Friday.

Police arrested Owen Wednesday in front of his home and said he was linked to the convent through fingerprints found at the crime scene.

Police said that while the sisters slept, a man broke into the convent through a second story window, ransacked the kitchen, rifled the office and stole a small amount of cash.

The man then allegedly made his way to the bedroom of the nun. Threatening her with a knife, he allegedly raped her. She was treated at a hospital for injuries, including severe neck swelling and damage to her airway. On Wednesday, the Rev. Angelo Carbone, a Catholic priest in Kansas City's Columbus Park neighborhood, looked on as a hired hand measured the convent's windows for iron bars.

Local music scene evolves throughout semester

PHIL KELLUM

Within the past few months, Manhattan's local music scene has seen quite a few changes, some for the best and some for the worst.

Truck Stop Love broke up after several years of existence and two nationally released albums.

Scully, Manhattan's thrash metal gods, also called it quits after many years and many recordings.

And soon after releasing an astounding demo tape, Manhattan's kings of emo, Seraphine 7, said good-bye as well.

amazing coincidence probably. It's life so difficult?" kinda sad.'

Despite the fact that more bands are now playing, some people still have doubts about the live music scene in Manhattan.

One drawback is the fact that it seems like the same bands play in Manhattan again and again.

"A zillion people seeing Frogpond four times a month doesn't mean the scene is in an upswing," Anderson said.

Cara Hollandsworth, host of KSDB 91.9 FM's Local Spotlight, agreed

"It's Frogpond every other week It's the same bands over and over. There's a lot of great bands that need attention because people aren't willing to take a chance booking a band that hasn't played here before," Hollandsworth said. "Frogpond played here and drew very well, and the Bubble Boys drew very well, so they brought them here together. It would have made a lot more sense to book Frogpond with bands no one has heard of to get them more exposure.

Within the last year, all of her favorite local bands broke up, Hollandsworth said.

"When Truck Stop Love broke up, I cried. When Seraphine 7 broke up, I just got pissed off," she said. "I thought, 'Why are you making my

But many good things have occurred in Manhattan as well.

There are now shows weekly at Rusty's Last Chance and Bombers, giving people a chance to check out local and regional acts frequently. Also, Jeff Fortier of Lawrence's Avalanche Productions has put on a couple of shows at Bombers, bringing in more well-known ska bands to the area.

Hollandsworth said that she thinks people are beginning to become more interested in live music in Manhattan.

"We do get calls from people wanting to hear Kansas City and Lawrence bands. It shows they're maybe becoming more interested in music from around here," she said.

Both Hollandsworth and Anderson said that Steve Anthony of KMKF-FM 101.5, who books the shows at Last Chance, is the biggest change in the scene recent-

"Steve Anthony isn't doing anything different or new, but it's just new to the people who haven't been around so long," Hollandsworth

Still, it is the audience that will determine if Manhattan's music scene will be a success.

"It's nice to see new bands popping up all the time, but it's been a long time since something new was done that was going to work," Hollandsworth said. "The shows I enjoy are fewer and far between. I miss the days when I liked every band. I'm old and jaded I guess.

"The future is not bright, there's a few glimmers of hope, but it needs a lot of work. It's in the hands of people who go to the shows. If they don't go see the little ones, then the big ones won't be brought in," Hollandsworth said.

Scott Griffin, bassist and covocalist for Jiffy Boy, said the biggest change in the local scene is the number of venues in which to

"There's more of an availability to play, which makes it a lot easier," he said

Recently, more bands have been emerging from the woodwork and are playing more diverse forms of music in Manhattan.

"There's a wide variety of music. It's becoming more diversified which is good," Griffin said.

It will be interesting to see what exactly the future of the local scene will look like over the summer months and in the fall when many students return to Manhattan.

"Hopefully, it will grow with more venues. I'd like to see an all ages venue. I wouldn't mind seeing a hip hop band, to tell the truth, Griffin said.

Six nurses at a government health care for the disabled facility in Barrie, Ontario, were fired in December for disobeying new countywide rules that required them to provide sexual assistance to their patients, e.g., helping them masturbate, positioning couples for sex, assisting to put on a condom. In January, the agency said it would reconsider the rules, but the women remain jobless and have filed a lawsuit

Linear tuition lowers class loads, decreases tuition revenue

HEATHER HOLLINGSWORTH

The Kansas Board of Regents guessed students enrollment patterns would change with the implementation of linear fees. It just didn't know how much.

K-State, the University of Kansas and Wichita State University all switched to linear fees in fall 1996. Students no longer pay a flat rate for seven or more hours. Instead, each in-state, undergraduate credit hour costs $63.

Students accepted the change rather quietly. There were no sit-ins or violent protests. But administrators, regents members and legislators alike noticed an average four-tenths reduction in undergraduate class loads. Between the three regents schools, reductions in class loads, resulting in decreased tuition revenue, cost $2.3 million.

With KU racking in a $1.1-million shortfall, followed by K-State at $841,651 and WSU with $375,615, the schools were forced to request state funds to make up for the shortfall. Their requests were granted.

But the money did not come without a cost. KU, K-State and WSU will not receive money for technology improvements next year, and shortfalls caused by the switch to linear tuition were cited as "We didn't really know what to expect," said Tom Rawson, administration and finance vice president. "A change in tuition pricing structure had not occurred in 30 or 40 years. We didn't know how it would affect the average student load."

A reduction in average class loads is nothing new. The average class load has been declining through the 1990s by an average of one-tenth each year at K-State.

In fall 1990, the average class load was 14.24 credit hours. By fall 1996, the average class load had shrunk to 13.48. But reductions of four-tenths came as a

"I was concerned from the standpoint that there was just a little more of a drop than we anticipated," Tom Schellhardt, associate vice president, said. "That, and the impact on enrollment decreases."

Linear fees have been discussed for nearly a decade, and their implementation was partially prompted by the adoption of tuition accountability.

Unlike previous systems, tuition accountability provides increased funds to schools experiencing enrollment increas-

Before fall 1996, the state controlled K-State's tuition money. K-State did not directly see the profits generated by enrollment increases. First, the money had to filter through an enrollment-adjustment

When enrollment increased in the early 1990s, the amount the enrollment-adjustment formula generated for K-State was $4.7 million.

The Kansas Legislature said the request was too large, and instead of getting $4.7 million, K-State received about $2.5

Tuition accountability prevents these situations by allowing K-State to keep one-fourth of the tuition revenue created by tuition-rate increases. K-State is able to keep all revenue resulting from enrollment growth to finance things like additional instructors and sup-Tuition accountability required a more accurate means of accounting for enrollment growth. In order to adopt tuition accountability, a switch to linear fees was But tuition accountability was not the only reason for the change.

Linear fees help students interested in combining their K-State classes with courses taken at community colleges and through the Division of Continuing Education. Prior to the switch, students had to deal with two different fee-payment struc-

Although the switch to linear tuition was not the only reason cited, the Division of Continuing Education experienced a 157-person enrollment increase between fall 1995 and fall 1996.

Fort Riley civilian enrollment was also up from 535 in fall 1995 to 622 in fall

With linear tuition, students taking between seven and 12 hours found extra money in their checkbooks after writing their tuition checks. Under the old system, a student taking six hours would have to pay an additional $529 to add one credit hour. A student taking seven hours paid the same amount as a student taking 21

Linear fees changed that situation. The result - graduate numbers shifted by about two-tenths, and undergraduate enrollment numbers shifted drastically. Some 992 more students enrolled in between seven and 14 hours. Some 877 fewer students enrolled in 15 or more

"Before, they never thought about paying full fees. Now, they realized whatever hours they were taking they were paying for," Schellhardt said. "It was soon realized students would get a refund if they dropped a course."

Amanda Ewing, junior in English education, is enrolled in 16 hours this spring. To graduate in 4-1/2 years, she will need to take between 15 and 17 hours each semester.

"I don't like it," Ewing said. "It penalizes students that take heavier loads." From an accounting standpoint - other than inflation - the student body is going to pay the same amount for its education, said Doug King, director of administrative systems section of the Division of Continuing Education.

But with some 70 percent of the student body receiving some sort of financial aid, inflation is an issue students must

"It's one or more semesters of borrowed money students have to begin paying off after graduation," Foster said.

Students must also face the opportunity cost of prolonging their educational

A quick brush up on economics: The opportunity cost of one year of college is the money students can earn working plus the cost of college.

Some students, operating under the keg/rent system of economics, fail to see the bigger picture. In other words, dropping one hour, $63, equals a keg of beer and dropping a three-hour class, $189, pays for about one month's rent. Out-ofstate and graduate students see an even greater return.

"It's an issue of concern, but I think a more significant concern is what has happened over the last 10 years," Don Foster, K-State registrar, said. "A minimum degree requirement is 120 hours. To graduate on time, students have to take 15 hours each semester."

But students are not taking 15 hours. In 1987, the average head count enrollment was 14.51 - more than one credit hour more than the current 13.48.

"It's a societal thing. There is a general feeling that it's not necessary to get through college and out to work like there was 15 to 20 years ago," Foster said. "I don't think it's tied to linear fees and tu-

Martin arraigned on Westmoreland charges

JOHN HENDERSON

In Pottawatomie District Court last Thursday at 2:20 in the afternoon, a Westmoreland resident was arraigned for charges related to the Feb. 21 slaying of his 66-year-old neighbor.

James Neal Martin, 26, was instructed by his defense not to enter a plea, so the court entered a plea of not guilty for him.

District Court Judge Tracy Klinginsmith spent most of the 20 minutes prior to the plea entry outlining and explaining the five general charges against Martin. They were murder, rape, criminal sodomy, aggravated burglary, and aggravated robbery. He explained the possible sentences that Martin would face if he was found guilty. The judge asked Martin if he understood the charges. Martin paused, consulted with his defense attorneys, then said, "Yeah."

The purpose of arraignment is to explain. the charges against the defendant and enter a plea. In a preliminary hearing conducted May 28, District Magistrate Steven Roth concluded that the state had sufficient evidence for trial.

In that hearing, testimony by witnesses described in detail how Martin allegedly burglarized Rose Gallagher's home around midnight Feb. 21, carrying a .22 caliber rifle and demanding money, according to the Associated Press. Prosecutors alleged that when the grandmother refused, Martin raped and sodomized her, shot her once in the head, then dismembered her body.

The Associated Press reported that police and KBI investigators testified at the hearing to finding Gallagher's torso floating in a creek, and various other pieces of her body around Westmoreland.

The prosecutorial team of Ed Van Petten, from the Kansas Attorney General's office, and Pottawatomie County District Attorney Jeff Elders filed for the death penalty. Premeditated or first-degree murder can be prosecuted in Kansas for capital punishment under special circumstances. This includes murder committed in connection with rape

Defense attorneys Ron Wurtz and Tom

Bartee were on hand from the Topeka-based Death Penalty Defense Unit, and will be defending Martin throughout the trial.

The charge of murder, Klinginsmith explained, could be punishable by death, 40 years to life without parole or 25 years to life without parole and or including $500,000 in fines.

Rape is a level 2 degree felony, and is punishable by 136 to 616 months in prison and or including $300,000 in fines, depending on history of prior offense, the judge said. Criminal sodomy carries the same penalties, he said.

Aggravated burglary is a level 5 felony,

The development of low- to middle-income housing is being lobbied for by Cohen-Esrey Real Estate Services Inc., out of Kansas City, Mo.

Elaine Johannes, resident of Northview, said there were three reasons why the community wanted to stop the devel-

"The actual site itself is one," Johannes said. "The site is better suited for low-density housing, not high-density," she said. This concern stems from the number of housing units to be built on the amount of land requested. The residents feel the 50-plus housing project would negatively affect the 11 The biggest effect this project would have is with the drainage capacity of the area, Johannes said. "The area floods very easy," Mike Bush, resident, said. "In my understanding, the apartment complex to be built would be approximately three feet above anything surround-

Resident Jan Barkey said the building project would create water runoff into the already-existing streets, which would overwhelm the present drainage system. "We need regulations to protect us," Barkey said.

The third problem was the infrastructure, Johannes said.

"The roads, pedestrian egress, schools and recreation all bring in problems that make this not a good site," she said. Jim Lockhart is a resident with his home 40 feet from where the planned building site is. His driveway would run parallel with the one for the building complex. To fight this project, Lockhart made about 150 signs with the phrase "Stop Cohen-Esrey" and placed them in residents' yards around the neighborhood. "I'll make probably another 150," he said. "Some signs were asked for. The others we passed out at our informational meetings."

Motel owner wants people to visit, but not for McVeigh

The owner of Dreamland Motel in Junction City wants people to visit her establishment for its clean, comfortable rooms, not because Timothy McVeigh

Lea McGown, owner of the Dreamland Motel, has had her life and business changed dramatically since McVeigh stayed in her motel days before the Oklahoma City bombing on April 19, 1995.

McVeigh checked into the Dreamland Motel April 14, 1995. Three days later, the government alleges McVeigh went to Elliot's Body Shop in Junction City and rented the 20-foot Ryder truck used in the bombing. On April 17, 1995, Terry Nichols called the Dreamland Motel from Kansas City International Airport. The government alleges that call was the last of a series of calls made between McVeigh and Nichols in conspiring to bomb the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City. It's been more than two years since McGown positively identified McVeigh's photographs for the FBI, and she said she is ready for all the attention to

Decision on whether to execute McVeigh reaches jury this week

DENVER - Teachers will describe him as a silly, good-natured boy. Friends will say he was loyal and deeply concerned about the world around him. His father will speak, too. And then a jury will decide whether Timothy McVeigh should die.

The sentencing phase in the Oklahoma City bombing trial ends this week, after the defense calls dozens of witnesses to try to humanize a convicted mass murderer and provide some explanation for unspeakable horror.

The witnesses will paint a starkly different picture of McVeigh than the prosecution's portrait of an angry bomber with a twisted sense of patriotism. To the defense witnesses, he was a model soldier, a friendly neighbor and a hard worker. He was shy around women, socially awkward - but politically devout.

K-State basketball players Manny Dies and Pero Vasiljevic will not face felony charges for allegedly threatening a Collegian columnist in May. Riley County Attorney William E. Kennedy turned the case over to Bobby Almanza, assistant city attorney. The city attorney's office handles misdemeanor charges, not felonies. Almanza said he received the file on Thursday and would reach a decision about possibly filing charges in two weeks.

"So I'm just really in the process of reviewing them to see if I'm going to file or not," Almanza said.

The basketball players may still be charged with misdemeanors if the city attorney's office decides to Todd Stewart, junior in mass communications, told police that Dies and Vasiljevic entered his making threatening comments, he said.

He escaped from his apartment out a secondfloor window, Stewart said. He then jumped from his roof and went to a neighbor for safety.

The players broke down a bedroom door while searching for the columnist, Jeremy Kelley, Stewart's roommate, said.

Police responded to the disturbance, but could not do anything because the subjects had already left the scene, Kelley said.

The dispute allegedly stemmed from a Jan. 27 column Stewart wrote for the Collegian. In the column, Stewart wrote that Manny Dies was the worst player in college basketball. A second disturbance allegedly occurred on May The police responded but found no one outside.

Stewart and Kelley stayed with friends that night. The Office of Student Affairs paid for Stewart and Kelley to stay at a hotel for the rest of the semester.

Neither the county nor city attorneys had contacted Stewart regarding the case referral. "No one called me," Stewart said.

Police disband task force for slain prostitutes

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - After five weeks of fruitless efforts, police disbanded a special squad formed to investigate the deaths of five women who worked as prostitutes along Independence Avenue.

Police say they have no strong suspect in the case and have failed to discover anything solid from nearly 1,000 leads. Detectives also were unable to locate a crime scene.

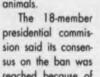

The police still have leads. The case was turned over to four detectives on the homicide

The special squad was formed May 5 after four bodies were found in the Missouri River downstream from Kansas City. A fifth body was later found.

Palestinians, Israelis meet after overcoming snag

CAIRO, Egypt - Israeli and Palestinian negotiators sought to revive the stalled Mideast peace process Sunday, but their meeting began only after Israel extracted a denial of reports it had agreed to stop building Jewish

The session had been announced Saturday, but was quickly overshadowed by the dispute over the alleged Israeli promise.

Informed of the Israeli protest, chief Palestinian negotiator Saeb Erekat denied Israel had agreed to such a freeze.

Netanyahu's office then issued a statement that said, "In the wake of the denial, the Israeli delegation is leaving for Cairo."

Egypt's Middle East News Agency reported that the Israeli decision to go ahead with the meeting - arranged through Egyptian mediation - came after high-level contacts among Egypt, Israel and the United States.

Richardson: U.S. might help militarily with Congo

KINSHASA, Congo - Congo's new government may receive military cooperation from the United States as an incentive to adhere to human rights standards, U.S. envoy Bill Richardson said Sunday.

President Laurent Kabila, anxious to retain the Western goodwill he garnered during his seven-month war to oust Zairian dictator Mobutu Sese Seko, agreed this weekend to allow U.N. officials to freely investigate the alleged massacre of refugees.

Kabila's forces previously had blocked access to areas humanitarian groups believe became killing fields during the civil war.

Congo's new leader made the commitment during a meeting Saturday with Richardson, at which time he also raised the prospect of military aid.

Richardson said the United States was open to Kabila's proposal.

Richardson said Kabila had agreed to prosecute those who violate human rights and give full access to aid agencies trying to help tens of thousands of Rwandan refugees in Congo.

Burning train wreck forces hundreds indoors

SCARY, W.Va. - Hundreds of people shut themselves in their homes Sunday and others stayed in emergency shelters after a train carrying hazardous chemicals slammed into a coal train and exploded into flames.

Some people fled by crawling underneath a layer of thick smoke.

One chemical tank car continued burning Sunday and rail cars blocked the only road leading into a residential area in a hollow about 10 miles west of Charleston.

Residents probably would not be allowed to return until Monday, a railroad spokesman

One train worker was killed and two others were injured late Saturday when the eastbound CSX Transportation train rammed the eastbound CSX coal train. Thirteen cars were derailed.

Police make arrests in killing of Time Warner CEO's son

NEW YORK - The main suspect in the torture killing of Jonathan Levin, the son of Time Warner's top executive, was arrested in a housing project and charged with first-degree murder and robbery.

Acting on a phone tip, police on Saturday arrested Levin's former student, convicted drug peddler Corey Arthur, 19. Police Commissioner Howard Safir said another suspect, Montoun Hart, 25, was charged with second-degree murder and robbery.

The motive for the killing was robbery, Safir said. Investigators believe Levin was tortured and forced to reveal his ATM password, then killed after his assailants used the card to withdraw $800 from a nearby bank machine.

Levin, 31, was the son of Time Warner chairman and CEO Gerald Levin. His partially decomposed body was discovered Monday night in his modest, one-bedroom apartment after he failed to show up for work.

Driving past Goodnow and Marlatt Halls June 1-7 yielded some unusual sights to passers-by.

A large formation of boys marching, drums beating, and red and blue signs announced the American Legion Boys' State.

Boys' State brought more than 700 Kansas high school seniors to the K-State campus. The program was moved from University of Kansas to K-State in 1991. The original Boys' State program was founded in Illinois in 1935 at the Illinois State Fair Grounds.

Students attending must have at least a B-minus grade point average, have completed their junior year of high school and have been active in their community.

Boys' State of Kansas was founded in 1937 to give youth a hands-on opportunity to learn how government operates and instill a sense of ownership, with the goal of making the participants better

"We believe the purpose is to help them begin establishing their own political identity," Jeff Schrag, personnel advisor for Boys' State, Students establish a camaraderie and gain a sense of citizenship and gain insight on politics, Schrag said.

"More than anything, I've learned that planning a functional government is much more difficult than it appears," Brent Zluticky, senior at Wichita South High School, said.

When the boys arrived, they formed a simulated society. They were given a fictitious ethnic status, political party and occupation. The participants were also given Boys' State dollars with which they bought their campaign materials and advertisements in the Boys' State newspaper, the Stater's Union, which was published daily.

Individuals and associations, which function like political action committees, also contributed dollars to campaigns.

During the day, students attended government meetings and practice marching in formation. Participants were encouraged to bring an instrument and compete in the talent show.

A Boys' State chorus that practiced daily until the show on Wednesday

Competitive athletics including basketball and softball were also offered. Participants attended an inaugural celebration at the end of the week with a dance and movies to honor the elected governor.

Two Boys' State participants were selected to attend the American Legion's Boys' Nation in Washington, D.C., in July on the basis of their speech and performance during the week

Boys' Nation follows the national political process and provides experience in governing on a federal level. The two senators from each state can meet with top officials including the presidents.

Those who attend help promote the program and recruit by recounting their positive experiences.

"It taught me a lot about leadership and to believe in yourself. It exposed me to the best and brightest of Kansas' tomorrow," Matt Pruett, senior at Holton High School, said.

Mercy continues consolidation by moving emergency room

People who need emergency medical service will no longer be able to go to Mercy Health Center on Sunset.

Emergency room services at the Sunset Avenue campus of the Mercy Health Center closed last Monday and moved to the College Avenue campus.

E. Michael Nunamaker, CEO of Mercy Health Center said the closing is part of Mercy's on-going plan to consolidate the Sunset and College avenue facilities and reduce the amount of duplicated services.

"When the hospitals joined together in July 1996, they came together because the boards knew in the long run that this community could not support two acute care facilities," he said. "The duplication of expenses in terms of staff, facilities and technology was just something that couldn't be sustained."

Nunamaker said that without a merger, many services would have suffered or had to be eliminated because of losses.

"Many things we normally do, we do without any mechanism for payment. The emergency room is a service provided by the hospital that traditionally loses money. It is a service that we have to figure out a way to maintain," he said.

Larry Couchman, director of emergency and EMS services at Mercy Health Center, said the merger would help to eliminate duplicated services and hopefully gain ural choice for the hospital because it has twice the square footage of the Sunset Avenue facility and has a larger number of emergency rooms and bed space. The move to College Avenue has been very successful. Couchman said.

"It has been planned for quite some time. The preparations have been on going over the last several months. The move on Monday was really smooth, and things have worked well.

Although the Sunset Avenue emergency room will be closed, patients brought to the Sunset Avenue campus can still be stabilized and have treatment initiated before being transferred to the College Avenue

"We are maintaining one room in that department to be able to take care of emergency patients that happen to walk into that facility. As long as we maintain two separate campuses, two separate facilities, we will always have a room that has equipment and supplies to maintain the ability to stabilize a patient," Couchman said.

Alice Roepke, assistant director of community relations, said combining the two emergency rooms will make the delivery of care more cost effective, but K-State students need to be aware of the change.

"There will no longer be emergency services at the Sunset location, which is closer to the K-State campus. That's where the students need to be aware," she said. "No longer can they just walk over to the Sunset campus if they've done it in the past."

Mercy Health Center has closed its emergency room on Sunset Avenue and moved all services to their College Avenue campus.

Fort Riley not affected by cutback rumors

Fort Riley doesn't have to worry about the possible cutback rumors currently circulating, Fort Riley officials said

It turns out that the rumors of another cutback were just rumors. A proposal by the Department of Defense to do a study on all posts, not just Fort Riley, was the start of all the concern, Fort Riley officials

Deb Skidmøre, public affairs officer at Fort Riley, said Fort Riley officials were never told they were going to close or even put on a list of possible clos-

"It's business as usual on post," she said.

Fort Riley generates approximately $559 million in Kansas and a cutback would be greatly felt by the community, Skidmore said.

Of the 4,000 soldiers who were affected by the cutback in 1995, some were transferred, others took retirement and some left the service all together.

Keeping the people in Manhattan who work on post and live here is on of Manhattan's main goals. About 5,300 people who work on post live in Manhattan, and in a population this size, the loss of 5,300 people would be devastating, Chamber of Commerce officials said.

Any loss of people living in the area would be felt, considering Fort Riley is among the top three employers in the area of Geary, Pottawatomie and Riley counties, Chamber of Commerce officials said.

The number of soldiers at Fort Riley has dropped from 14,000 in 1995 to 10,000 currently. Another decrease of this size is a good reason for concern, but the danger of this happening is minimal, Fort Riley officials said.

Glorification of McVeigh's motel room overshadows victims

ere's the story: A guy checks into the Dreamland Motel in Junction City, spends the night,

Five days later said guy casually blows up a federal building in middle America, murdering 168 people.

Thanks to the morbid curiosity that many find themselves tangled in, the Dreamland Motel suddenly becomes the subject of many a drive-by snapshot. Or, in some cases, a reason to stop and ask to see the room that Timothy McVeigh actually slept in. After all, this is a piece of American history, however insignificant it may seem, right?

With each picture taken of Dreamland, with each visit to that infamous room, 168 lost lives are lost in the rubbernecking and gawk-

If people want to see where McVeigh slept, it elevates him to a status usually reserved for the admired and respected.

It also works out a convenient deal for supporters of McVeigh's cause - they get free publicity and a site dedicated to one of their own. The deal isn't so appealing for those affected by the bombing. On their end, they get to deal with the idea that the person who murdered their loved ones is being glorified in Junction City, U.S.A.

And if we're already memorializing McVeigh, why not erect something at Fort Riley saying he was stationed there once? Or how about selling tickets to see Elliott's Body Shop, the place where McVeigh rented the

Rather than taking that trek to Junction City to see a bed, why not take the drive down to Oklahoma City to see the results of McVeigh's actions.

Say it ain't so Joe! Don't blame cancer on cigarette icons ey Joe, where you gonna run to now? Two weeks ago the Federal Trade Commission voted 3-2 to bring action against the R.J. Reynolds tobacco company. What for?

Joe Camel The tobacco company is being accused once again of targeting minors with its Joe Camel advertising. Once again people are trying to blame someone else for society's problems, and this time the tobacco companies are taking the blame.

Accept the fact that you choose to smoke. Kids choose to smoke. They don't think, "Joe Camel is cool. I will go smoke his cigarettes.'

Television has been blamed for warping children's minds, and now part of the blame for youths who choose to smoke is getting pinned on the tobacco companies.

If someone wants to smoke, they are going to smoke. There are many things that influence people to light up. Don't blame it on Joe.

Bugs Bunny cartoons that were made 30 or more years ago feature characters smoking. These cartoons are shown over and over even today, and they appear on a form of media that Joe Camel never got to appear on - the television.

Kids are probably much more likely to see television than a billboard advertisement.

Should Warner Brothers be at fault for this?

The FTC says in the past ten years since Joe Camel was introduced in 1987, Camel's share of the youth market went from under 3 percent to 13.2 percent in 1993, but the company says their own research shows that only 3.1 percent of teenagers smoke Camel cigarettes.

Not too many years ago I was in high school, where most of the students are under age 18. There was also a large proportion of the student body who smoked. I am pretty sure that most of these kids did not smoke Camel cigarettes

The New York Times even reported that Roscoe Starek III of the FTC said the FTC should devote resources to other concerns rather than to Joe Camel.

Besides blaming Joe Camel for minors smoking, there have been many lawsuits in the court system that blame the tobacco companies for health problems that people have acquired from the use of their products. Quit blaming someone else for your problems.

Blame yourself.

I would be willing to bet that there are very few people who have been tied down and forced to smoke and become addicted to nicotine. People may have gotten pressure from friends, parents or something, but they chose to smoke.

There have been Surgeon General's warnings on cigarettes for years. There are many opportunities to quit, so don't try to blame someone else for what you did.

Yes, I agree that nicotine is addictive, but over the years there have been many people who have quit, people who started smoking and people who didn't quit, regardless of the

Is it time to start suing the alcohol producers when someone is hurt by a drunk driver?

Cigarette packages have warnings that say the product is harmful. Consumers can read the label and then make a decision if they want to use the product. McVeigh trial verdict anti-climatic this is the way the trial ends. It was surreal, the way the Collegian staff surrounded the television one week ago, transfixed and no sound except a CNN anchor stalling for a verdict. As if these 12 people could breathe life back into the casualties of the Oklahoma City bombing. And you'd think they could, the way the nation stood with its breath held, impatiently pacing several days before the word was spoken again and again, "guilty," and with them the full weight of the legal system came boiling down on Timothy

And as the crowd in front of the television dispersed, I expected some sort of release. Not applause, not cheering, maybe just a whispered "finally" or some sense of closure to an incident that shattered any illusions of invulnerability this country ever held from terror.

Not even that Even as Timothy McVeigh stood accused, so did the American legal system. Too many times in recent years has the media fixated on the cases of the criminal (convicted in the court of public opinion) set free even under a wave of overwhelming evidence. We can remember the Rodney King verdict and its repercussions, or the Menendez brothers' stonewalling of the legal system with a drawn-out legal fight capped with a mistrial. And, of course, O.J. Simpson.

This trial was a test to see if the legal system as we knew it could stop from blinking under the media spotlight, or whether we as a nation needed to re-examine our system for determining guilt and innocence. Of course, it should be noted that the puzzling results of all of the aforementioned faith-breaking trials were later undermined through other court proceedings, though to more muted airplay. The damage was done. Retrials and civil court cases have the effect of a murmured halfhearted apology to an already jaded public perturbed by the year-long emptiness between the bombing and arrest and the trial.

If there was a case that had to return a guilty verdict and still retain a shred of doubt, this was it. McVeigh faced off against an onslaught of evidence, not all of which was legally admissible, but none of which went unnoticed by the camera's eye. Videotape of McVeigh in Waco during the standoff of the Branch Davidians. An alleged confession. Witnesses. Surveillance photos. And it didn't help that McVeigh himself wasn't the most telegenic person in the world. Not legally binding, but public sympathy sways easily to the more attractive members of society.

McVeigh's defense fell short in far too many points allow him even an inch of breathing room. There was no alibi. The cross-examinations, while verbally vicious, didn't undermine the credibility of the prosecution's witnesses. Attorney

Stephen Jones settled for being rude instead of effective, and lead prosecutor Joseph Hartzler presented a case which integrated emotion with logic, weaving a web from which McVeigh could not escape. He didn't have a dream team of lawyers to explode the cracks in the government's case It was a trial the government had to win. A scene of America being betrayed from within ends with America's systems working for its good once more. Roll the credits this made-for-TV movie is over.

So there is no sense of victory, no sense of great accomplishment. Perhaps the calm that settles in is just a feeling that this is the natural ending to an unnatural incident. The criminals are supposed to be caught and sent away — we shouldn't feel the need to applaud or cheer when nature is in order.

And no matter how matter how many are lead away in handcuffs, no matter if all the guilty parties are locked away until the end of time, there are still gaps in families and lives that can never be filled.

There is no bang, no whimper. For 168 graves filled before their time, there is only silence.

Cohen convenes panels to study adultery and related issues

WASHINGTON - Caught in a storm of criticism over its handling of sexual misconduct in the military, the Pentagon asked its legal officers Saturday to review the clarity of existing instructions on how to treat adultery

In an unusual weekend announcement that underscored anxiety over this issue, Pentagon officials said they do not intend to weaken strictures against adultery but want to clarify circumstances in which it should be considered a crime.

"Recent perceptions that our system is inconsistent damage the morale of our troops," Defense Secretary William Cohen said in a written statement. He did not appear at a briefing in which lower level officials tried to explain the initiative.

The cases that elevated this to crisis proportions were the forced resignation last month of Air Force pilot Lt. Kelly Flinn, charged with adultery, lying and disobeying an order and the admission by Gen. Joseph W. Ralston, the vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, that he had an affair with a civilian woman in the mid-1980s while estranged from his wife.

Ralston has said he intends to remain in the service, and Pentagon spokesman Kenneth Bacon said Saturday that the general remains a leading candidate to replace Gen. John Shalikashvili as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The New York Times reported in its Sunday editions that Ralston is expected to tell Defense Secretary William Cohen when they meet Monday that he is with-Joint Chiefs chairman. Ralston has been traveling in Asia since the first public reports this week of his admission of an extramarital affair.

Asked about the Times report, Bacon said Saturday evening, "I have no indication that that is the case." He said Ralston had been in regular contact with Cohen's office and that the general had given no indication of dropping out. It is widely speculated within the Pentagon that Ralston will withdraw to spare Cohen the trouble.

Cohen contends Ralston's adultery should not disqualify him as a candidate for the No. 1 military post because it did not discredit the military or compromise its good order and discipline.

The Uniform Code of Military Justice does not specifically mention adultery, but a federal manual that is the basis for interpreting the code says adultery is a crime if it compromises good order and discipline or brings discredit upon the service.

Bacon said there is no intent to change the Uniform Code of Military Justice but to make it easier for commanders in the field to understand when to investigate charges of adultery and how to determine an appropriate punish-

A panel of senior legal officers of all services will propose clarifications to the adultery rules. The Defense Department's general counsel, its top legal officer, will recommend actions to Cohen based on the panel's work. Cohen instructed that the review be completed by Aug. 18.

Cohen also announced he would convene a panel of private citizens to review issues related to mixed-sex training and said an internal group of civilian and military officials will look at whether the military has selectively enforced its standards of personal con-

The civilian panel looking at sexually integrated training will be headed by former Republican Senator Nancy Kassebaum Baker of Kansas. It is to finish its work in six months

Utah outjazzes Chicago, 78-73

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SALT LAKE CITY - This time, the Mailman delivered on Sunday.

With the direction of the NBA Finals hanging in the balance, Karl Malone shook off his history of playoff foul line failures, tuned out Scottie Pippen and made the two biggest free throws of his life.

The shots gave Utah a three-point lead with 17 seconds left, and the Jazz went on to beat the Chicago Bulls 78-73 Sunday night to even the finals at two games apiece.

"I said earlier that I wished I could be back in that situation," Malone said. "I just blanked everything out and concentrated.

The series will resume in Utah Wednesday night with the Jazz looking to become the first team ever to take a 3-2 lead over Chicago in the final round. As it is, they are the first team since Portland in 1992 to be tied with the Bulls after four games.

And their latest victory might just convince them that they have a legitimate chance, even though they'll need to win at least one game in Chicago.

It was the second-lowest scoring game in NBA Finals history, and the Jazz won it in part by holding the Bulls without a point over the final two minutes and scoring the game's last nine points. Michael Jordan had a chance to tie it with six seconds left, but he missed an off-balance 3pointer that would have made it 76-

Malone rebounded the miss and fed the ball out, and Bryon Russell went in for an uncontested slam that put an exclamation point on Utah's stirring victory.

Malone ran over and hugged Coach Jerry Sloan for several seconds in an emotional display of the vindication Malone obviously felt after making his final two foul shots.

It was just a week earlier that Malone went to the line in the closing seconds of Game 1 with a chance to break a tie game and put Utah in position for an upset.

But after Pippen walked over and told him "The Mailman doesn't deliver on Sunday," Malone missed both shots, and Jordan won the game on a buzzer-beating 21-footer.

This is what I'm expecting from the "I'm just happy to be here" Utah Jazz. Now I know what you're thinking ... "Hold on just a doggone minute. The NBA is finally going to offer us an exciting, competitive sevengame series. After all, they have Karl 'I talked reporters into making me the MVP' Malone."

After games three and four, could agree it looks like the Jazz have a chance of winning

5 Cats bring home track All-Americans

STAFF REPORTS

Five K-State students earned all-America status at the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships over the weekend, and eight Wildcats will try to top all of America later this week at the U.S. Outdoor Championships.

Senior Vanitta Kinard led the way for the Cats at the NCAA Championships in Bloomington, Ind., taking third in the triple jump. She tied her personal best Friday with a leap of 45'1-3/4" to close out her K-State career. Kinard's all-America certificate was the fifth of her career. Her mark also set a new school record. Her previous jump of the same distance was wind-aided, but her leap on Friday had a legal reading.

In other events, sophomore Renetta Seiler took fifth in the hammer throw Saturday with a mark of 195'11", good for her third all-American. Seiler also competed in the discus, but only managed to finish 19th with a throw of 153'2"

Also on Saturday, junior high-jumper Wanita Dykstra also picked up her third all-America honor after clearing 6'1/2".

Senior Travis Livingston ran a personal best in the 110-meter hurdles in the semifinals on Friday, but he missed qualifying for the finals by one one-thousandth of a second. However, his time, 13.748 seconds, was good enough for a school record and all-America sta-

This was the final NCAA competition for the Wildcats this season, but eight K-Staters will compete in the U.S. Outdoor Championships Wednesday through Sunday. Kirsten Schultz, Keith Black, Livingston, Kinard, Ed Broxterman, Seiler and former athletes Steve Fritz and Nicole Green will compete against top U.S.

Also, another K-State track athlete, junior Gene Petersen, was honored for his achievements. Petersen, who won the discus title at the Big 12 Outdoor Championships and finished second in the hammer throw, was recognized for his success in the classroom. Petersen was named to the 1997 GTE District VII Academic all-America Team. He maintains a 3.73 grade point average in civil engineering.

Cats sign recruits to fill voids caused by draft

-State baseball coach Mike Clark has a simple philosophy on Big 12 recruiting.

We don't need to finish just second or third," Clark said. "We need to finish first in order to be competitive in the Big 12."

Optimism, yes, for a team that just finished ninth in the first-ever Big 12 Conference baseball season. But Clark said he thought he found one of those players that could make the Wildcats more competitive in Tom Henshaw, a hard-throwing left-handed pitcher from Arvada, Colo.

"We saw him last fall and thought his protectability was very good," Clark said. We think he can continue to develop into a top-flight pitcher." Clark said Henshaw throws an 86-87 mph fastball, but working on his confidence with his curve ball will be the No.

I priority before next spring. Henshaw was the fifth signee announced for next season.

Scott Voos, a 5'10", 170-pound infielder from Manhattan is the only other spring signee to date. Jeff Schuler, a 5'10", 165-pound third-baseman from Seaman High School in Topeka, Chad Cosens, a 6'0", 175-pound junior-college pitcher from Fort Scott and Trent Bridges, a 6'0". 195-pound reliever from Fort Scott junior college in Bixby, Okla., all signed in the fall.

Clark's expectations for the recruits are far from modest.

"We expect all of them to perform with us," Clark said. "We're happy with all of them.

Clark said the paperwork on another signee is in the mail, but NCAA regulations stipulate Clark cannot comment on the player until all paperwork becomes final. Still, the recruiting process is far from over.

With the loss of second-team Big-12

how me the money. That's K-State junior shortstop Heath Schesser's message to the Detroit Tigers if they want him to make the jump to the majors now.

"It's all going to depend on the offer," Schesser said. "I just want to see how much I can get out of them. As the fifth-round draft pick of the Tigers last week, the Tigers will have to make an enticing enough offer to get the first-team all-Big 12 selection to skip his senior

If the offer does not satisfy Schesser, then it's back to the Cats. Either way, the Tigers have to play his game, and Schesser said he liked that.

'It's a good position. The cards are all in my hands," Schesser said. K-State baseball coach Mike Clark said he would love to see Schesser back for his senior campaign, but realized Schesser may have an opportunity that he cannot

"He had a great year. He's in a great bargaining position," Clark said. This great bargaining position was brought about with .409 batting average this season with 16 home runs and 85 RBIs, a far cry from his beginnings as a 70th round draft pick out of high school. Even with a possible career with the Tigers near, the Manhattan native said he realized he might be leaving something behind. "I always thought about finishing my career here, of course," Schesser said. "It's a very-difficult decision.

Even with that, Clark admitted even he doesn't expect Schesser back in Wildcat

"I think where he went he's going to be pretty well off," Clark said. "He's going The almighty dollar is also on the mind of K-State relief pitcher David Johnson.

Johnson is also a junior and was selected in the ninth round by the Colorado Clark said he thought the ninth round was a little low for Johnson, but even with that, he also expected to lose Johnson to the pros. "Again, he's going to get enough money to make it worth his while," Clark said.

Schesser said he and Johnson did discuss the professional possibilities earlier in the year. Schesser, however, said it is a very sensitive issue.

'We talked about it, but I didn't want to pry too much," Schesser said. "It's pretty personal. Whatever he decides is up to him.'

For now, however, Schesser is more worried about making his own decision, and the Tigers may have something other than money going for them. "They say I'd be working with Alan Trammell, and that would be just great,"

Schesser said of the longtime Tigers shortstop. Two K-State players who will not have the difficult decision Johnson and Schesser face are senior pitchers Eric Yanz and Jon Oiseth. Yanz was an eighth-round selection of the Kansas City Royals, and Oiseth was a 31st round pick of the San Diego Padres.

With his four years of eligibility up, Yanz said he is ready for the jump to the "I'm very happy. I grew up with the Royals," Yanz said.

Yanz, a Golden, Colo. native, said the Royals were his favorite team as a kid, until Colorado got the expansion Rockies. Either way, he said he accomplished his dream of playing baseball at the next level when he was drafted by the Royals, and then signed on June 5.

Labor Department sponsors women's forum

BRANDON ROBERGER

A national forum sponsored by the U.S. Department of Labor Women's Bureau provided an opportunity for women across the state to discuss the equality of women.

Child care for working mothers was one of the many subjects discussed.

"Parts of the educational system should be able to provide child care. Often it costs some people $200 or more for an extra two hours of child care," Torry Dickinson, professor of women's studies, said.

The group of 50 women at the K-State site developed various challenges that face women today, including child education, lack of training skills, working with employers, help for women with a spouse that is terminally ill and the quality of their salaries with regards to men who have the same job.

All of these topics were discussed but the speakers also talked about entrepreneurial opportunities and how to handle stress in the work place.

The speakers were optimistic about what lies ahead for women.

Labor Secretary Alexis Herman said it is important that women are able to balance work and family along with the responsibilities of work.

Dickinson led the group in a discussion of their likes and dislikes. Many of the women voiced their displeasure about how part-time employees received no benefits. They said it really hurt single mothers who could only work part time because of their children.

Some women voiced their opinion about subjects that weren't covered.

"Domestic violence was not covered," Dickinson said. "I think that is an important issue too."

She said the labor movement should be taught on a national and world level in order to get results. "The government has said they can't do it," she said. "You all need to get involved. We need to think about how we want to change things with regards to women's work."

Six ways to make your life a little easier, and your home a whole lot safer.

Electrical power is safe and efficientif you'll keep these simple suggestions in mind.

Unplugged, safely.

How you disconnect appliances from their power source is just as important as how you use them. Never yank the appliance cord to free it from the electric outlet. Never plug or unplug an appliance when your hands are wet. Always unplug before cleaning an appliance.

Don't stick around downed power lines, electrical cabinets, or transformers.

If a power line is down, call us. Don't touch the line. If you see someone touching the line, don't try to rescue them. You could become a victim yourself. If a power line falls on your car while you're in it, stay in your car and wait for help.

In some areas, transformers and electrical cabinets are mounted at or near ground level. These should be handled only by professional utility service personnel. If you notice evidence of tampering or unsecured transformers or electrical cabinets, notify us immediately.

Not even with a 10-foot pole!

Keep tools, ladders, kites, TV antennas and tree branches away from power lines. If a branch or any object comes in contact with a power line DON'T ATTEMPT TO REMOVE IT!

No one, not even tree trimmers or contractors should come within ten feet of a power line. Call us, and we'll help you take care of the problem quickly and safely.

Look before you plant.

Remember, that nice little tree you plant now can grow to be a giant, and interfere with power lines. Ask your nursery about trees with mature heights of less than 25 feet. Before you plant, plan. Stay as far away from power lines as possible. And be sure to plant 10 to 15 feet from underground lines or pad mount transformers.

Dial before you dig.

In many areas KPL power lines are buried underground. Before doing any digging, simply call us toll free at 1-800 DIG SAFE (that's 344-7233). We'll be happy to help by marking underground power line locations at no charge.

Call on us to help.

If you have questions, call 1-800-794-4780 we're here with answers. If you have concerns, we'll help get them taken care of. After all, we're here to serve you. We're KPL. We're dedicated to making your life a little easier, and your home a safe place.

K-State soaks up honor with best-tasting soup

K-State has gained national recognition for developing the best tasting soup recipe in Campbell Soup Company's "Golden Ladle Food Service Recipe Contest" this spring

Fern Mayfield, recipe developer for K-State's Department of Housing and Dining Services, won the grand prize and division honors for her recipe for Chicken Enchilada Sopa Mayfield's Chicken Enchilada Sopa is a Mexican-style soup that features chicken broth, chicken, tortilla chips, salsa and green chilies.

"It's almost like a stew. It's pretty hearty," she said.

Mayfield's entry was selected the winner in the overall contest and the winner of the college and university

John Pence, food service director, initially encouraged Mayfield to enter

THE INGREDIENTS.

1 medium onion, chopped

2 cloves garlic, chopped

3 cans Swanson chicken broth

3 cups cooked chicken, diced

8 ounces diced green chilies 10 ounces diced tomatoes, green chilies (or 1 1/4 cups of salsa)

1/4 cup fresh, minced cilantro

1 cup sour cream

3 cups crushed tortilla chips

2 tablespoons butter or margarine

the contest, Mayfield said.

Grand prize in the contest is $1,000 and a culinary workshop presented by the prestigious Culinary Institute of America. The institute will send one of its top chefs to conduct the workshop at K-State for the Dining Service staff.

The money from the grand prize will be applied directly to K-State's Housing and Dining-Services. In addition, they will also be receiving a $500 Williams Sonoma catalog gift certificate. Mayfield said it will be used to buy something that will benefit both the department and Residence hall students.

Mayfield has been working for Housing and Dining Services for almost 22 years. She has worked at Derby Food Center the last 17 years and at Kramer Food Center the previous five years.

Mayfield said new, creative recipe ideas keep students happy.

The Northview community wanted this fight to end before summer, but a request by Cohen-Esrey for the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board to table the Planned Unit Development proposal until September 4 was approved June 2.

Bush said he was not concerned that the extra time will cause residents to lose their focus for the next meeting

"We have had eight weeks to prepare for this," he said. "We were ready for the May 5 meeting. And we prepared for the June 2 one."

With even more time to prepare, the residents were confident they will present a persuasive case. Lockhart said he believed that if people are informed about the situation, a solution can be found.

'Right now, people are not that well informed. They don't know what is going on," Lockhart said. Other residents agreed that when the time comes for them to speak, their concerns will be heard. "We will gain a little ground," Bush said. "We can fine tune our material. Maybe find out other information in our favor."

Barkey agreed.

'We had six speakers prepared to go before the board," she said. "My feeling is the whole thing was done - the request to be tabled - to take momentum away from us."

Barkey said the extra time now available is an advantage for the residents.

"The more time it takes, the developers will have to reapply for the land they want," Barkey said. Cohen-Esrey was unavailable for comment.

Throw in the additional losses of Jason Bichelmeyer and Todd Fereday to graduation, and Clark said he most definitely has a problem to address.

"We still have holes to fill. We're looking for power," Clark said. "If they have the ability to drive the ball, then we're interested."

To get this needed power to make the Cats more competitive, Clark said he is recruiting against some of college baseball's big names. He mentioned Florida State, Cal-State Fullerton, Long Beach State, USC and Mississippi as just a few of the school the Cats have already competed against. "We're competing with the elite. We have to," Clark said. "That's what you have to do in the Big 12."

Clark said the recent surge of Wildcats in the baseball draft may hurt the Cats on the field, but is a big positive in the recruiting war.

"It gives us something we can show them," Clark said. "Recruits see that they not only get a good education, but a good education in baseball."

She does the news for a local radio station and is involved with the Kansas Children Service League-Manhattan, Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan and Early Head Start.

He also will narrate a 15-minute videotape depicting his son's childhood in Locport, N.Y., a Buffalo suburb, Newsweek and Time magazines reported. The issues hit newsstands Monday

But McVeigh's teachers, including Anthony Miller, who taught McVeigh's 11th-grade class at Starpoint Central School in Pendleton, N.Y., will speak well of him.

"He was kind of boyish, silly and laughing," Miller told The Buffalo News. "He had a good disposition. Always kind of tongue-in-cheek and kind of witty. He wasn't the loner or a scowling dark face or someone with a chip on his shoulder."

this series. Stockton, the mute-mouthed, elbow-throwing, pick-setting, in-yourface point guard of the Jazz, came to play. The "I'm just happy to be here" look is gone from Stockton's face, and he came ready to play ball.

Stockton had 12 assists and 17 points in both games to complement Malone's 30 point-10 rebound average for the two games. From the tip on Friday, it was obvious Malone was happy to be home. He knew he could dominate. It was on his face.

Unfortunately, we all know Stockton and Malone won't keep it up. As soon as they leave the state of Utah, they will start playing like a couple of blind, wheelchair-bound doormats again.

The secret to their playing so well is in the Delta Center. The place does something to these two. I don't know what it could be. Maybe it's all the salt penetrating their nasal passages. They play inspired, they play as if they want to win - as if they expect to to win. That was nowhere to be found back in Chicago.

I have another theory. I think Jordan and Scottie Pippen just want to win the title in Chicago. How else can you explain the greatest player ever to breathe only taking 22 shots Friday night? Or what about his 10 points through three quarters, turning the ball over to Stockton down the stretch, "I'm gonna miss a clutch jump shot in crunch time" performance in game four? When Jordan just stands around during a finals game, one of two things is going on. He's either thinking, "I wonder how cool my next advertisement is going to be," or he's thinking, "Boy, I sure would like to win this thing at home. I might as well let Stockton take me for a baseline layup with 30 seconds left in the half."

You want proof? Last year the Bulls came out and absolutely dominated the Seattle Supersonics in the first two games in Chicago. They fly to Seattle and drop two of three. The title was won in Chicago.

It looks like the same fish is swimming in this year's finals, and it stinks.

the same this time - Utah led by one and the fans were quiet rather than screaming - but Pippen tried to do what he could to make history repeat itself.

With Malone stepping to the line to take the first shot, Pippen tried to walk over and say something but had his path blocked by Utah's Jeff Hornacek. Pippen went into rebounding position and yelled "Karl! Karl!" at Malone, but the MVP didn't respond.

He bounced in the first one and made the second to make it 76-73, and the Bulls, who had no timeouts left, inbounded the ball.

The ball went to Jordan, of course, outside the 3-point line. He dribbled right, left his feet and tried to square himself in the air, and the 23-footer looked good while it was in the air.

But it bounced in and out, Malone rebounded, and Russell was soon going in for the finisher.

"He missed those shots, but how many times have you seen him make them?" Utah coach Jerry Sloan said. "You've got a 50-percent chance he'll miss it. You have to have a little bit of Mary Horsch, spokesperson for the attorney general's office, explained the last two charges in terms of how they relate to the case. Burglary is the crimi-

to pay to get in, so they decided to tear down the fence. After police hurled teargas at them, some of the gate crashers picked up the canisters and hurled them back over the fence into the stadium. All I saw were hundreds of people rushing onto the baseball field and laying down. A foggy cloud spread across the stadium, and we were terrified.

Suddenly a voice came over the sound system and told us to bend forward and put our heads between our knees. They said it was tear-gas, not to worry, and that it would go away with the wind. Well, Mom wasn't too happy about that after she saw it happen from the hotel pool. We were lucky to get to go back to the Sunday night performance. Lucky we were, because Jimi Hendrix performed Sunday night.

Mom rode in the Holiday Inn elevator with him. I asked her how she knew, and she said he had big hair and a headband. In fact, she actually butted heads with him when they both leaned over to pick up something off the floor. My mom rode in the Holiday Inn elevator with the greatest guitar player in the history of rock 'n' roll.

Jimi Hendrix played the electric guitar like no one had ever played it before. His mind, body and soul went into his performances on the guitar. I have never felt so patriotic as when I heard him play "The Star Spangled Banner" that Sunday night in 1969, against a backdrop of starry skies and clean mountain air. When he played with his teeth on the song "Purple Haze," I realized he was a genius. But he wasn't the only one.

Mom was one too. Can you imagine her trying to drive up to the entrance and pick up three girls each night after the concert? With 14,000 to 15,000 people leaving at the same time, I think she performed a near-miracle by finding us each night.

Monday after the concert, we went shopping and bought some record albums. Record albums, the 11-inch LPs, had only been around for four years, and they were kind of expensive at $2.50 to $3 a pop. Today, my Three Dog Night, Iron Butterfly and Jimi Hendrix record albums stand as some of my most prized possessions.

Even though I don't have a record player, I can hold and read the album covers bringing back the wonderful memories of a time gone by. 1969, a special year in my life, and a memorable rock festival that will live in my mind forever.

Thanks, Mom.

To help the jury connect with McVeigh, the defense has promised to put jurors in McVeigh's boots, to read to them from the pages of his favorite magazine, Soldier of Fortune, and to show them videotapes that validated his fears that something terrible happened at

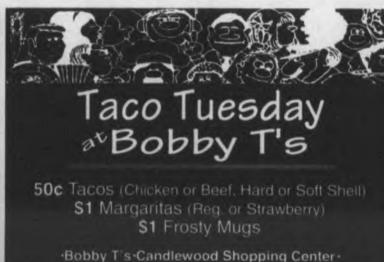

The jury will be brought into the home of Nichols, a friend of McVeigh's and brother of McVeigh's accused conspirator, Terry Nichols, on the day the fires raced through the Branch Davidian compound, fires that McVeigh blamed

The defense signaled it would present the Waco evidence not to retry the Branch Davidian case, but to provide a framework for understanding the mind of McVeigh. Waco expert Joel Dyer, who's on the defense list to testify, plans to show that McVeigh was just one of many people deeply disturbed by that siege in which about 80 people died.

Though McVeigh's attorneys are proposing no diminished capacity defense, they likely will introduce subtle evidence of emotional scars - how, as lawyer Richard Burr said, "He was affected like everybody else was after the Gulf War, in which McVeigh fought as a gunner."

Army buddies will be called to describe McVeigh as more than just an excellent soldier, but a good friend who would pick up pals at bars because they

The effects of cystic fibrosis

The genetic defect disrupts the functioning of several organs by causing ducts to become clogged by thick, sticky mucus or other secretions.

> AIRWAYS. Clogging and infection of bronchial passages impedes breathing. Infection progressively destroy the lungs. Lung disease accounts for most deaths from cystic fibrosis.

> LIVER. Plugging of small bile ducts impedes digestion and disrupts liver function in 5 percent

PANCREAS. Occlusion of ducts prevents the pancreas from delivering digestive enzymes to the bowel in 65 percent of patients. Diabetes REPRODUCTIVE TRACT. Absence of fine ducts, such as the vas deferens, renders 95 percent of males infertile. Women can be made infertile by a dense plug of mucus that blocks sperm from entering the uterus.

SCOTT M. LADD/Collegian

K-State, KU develop cystic fibrosis treatment

DAVID LOTT

A new treatment for cystic fibrosis could be on the market within five years thanks to a K-State researcher and his colleagues at the University of Kansas Medical

"It's a disease where all the pieces are there to put together," said John Tomich, director of K-State's Biotechnology Core Facility.

The envisioned drug therapy, developed by Tomich, would be a device similar to an inhaler that would disperse synthetic mini-proteins into the body to produce cross channels for chloride ions and fluids to pass through.

Tomich said he believed this new therapy would be applied every two weeks.

The cost would be in the thousands of dollars per year, instead of more than $100,000 per year with the current genetic therapy.

Cystic fibrosis is caused when cell membrane channels are defective or absent, inhibiting the flow of fluids and chloride ions.

Without chloride ions, cells cannot secrete enough fluids, allowing thick mucus to accumulate inside a cell. The mucus promotes bacterial growth.

Symptoms of cystic fibrosis include difficulty breathing, digestive problems and bacterial infections. Tomich said he thinks this discovery will be most effective on young children who haven't had previous treatment for cystic fibrosis. He said he hopes this new treatment will allow them to live a more normal life. In 1989, scientists found that the leading cause of cystic fibrosis is a flaw in the gene that codes for a protein called cystic fibrosis transmembrane conductive regulator, according to a National Institutes of Health Other channel proteins like the cystic fibrosis trans-membrane conductive regulator have been researched for their structure and activity. Chloride channel proteins located in the brain were emphasized in the study. Dr. Tomich and his colleagues found that short segments from these proteins produce ion channels like whole proteins.

Previous research made this discovery possible. For the past 10 years, Tomich has been involved in researching how channel proteins work.

Tomich and the K-State Biotech Core Lab has created different batches of synthetic proteins. Lawrence Sullivan and Jared Grantham from the University of Kansas Medical Center tested the proteins on mouse and dog kidney cells.

Sullivan said the mice used in the experiments have their genetic composition altered so they have the same type of illness as a human suffering from cystic fibro-

A water-lined pore has been successfully created in the kidney cell. The labs are measuring the chlorideforming and fluid secretion activity when the new molecule is present Cooperation between K-State and the KU Med. Center has been the key to success in this project, Sullivan said.

'The cooperation has been outstanding," Dr. Sullivan said. "Dr. Tomich and I have been in contact with each other a couple times each week."

The next level of experimentation will use whole tissues instead of cells. The new procedure will have to go through three clinical phases and pass the Food and Drug Administration's approval.

Jury to hear sentencing arguments for Megan Kanka's killer

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TRENTON, N.J. - Lawyers for the man convicted of murdering 7-year-old Megan Kanka will try to save his life by portraying him as the troubled product of an abusive childhood.

Jesse Timmendequas was convicted May 30 of luring Megan to his house across the street from hers in Hamilton Township by promising to show her his puppy, then raping, beating and strangling her. A day later, Timmendequas led police to her body in a park.

The jury that convicted Timmendequas returns to court Monday to consider whether he should be put to death. Death penalty experts say the defense has an uphill battle in trying to save Timmendequas, 36, a twice-convicted child molester.

"It's a very difficult case because it involves the death of a child, which is an extremely emotional issue," said John L. Call Jr., an attorney who has handled nearly a dozen death penalty trials. "It's going to be very compelling

The defense case will focus on humanizing Timmendequas by offering testimony about his troubled childhood, during which he was beaten and sodomized by his father and neglected by his mother, whose 10 children were fathered by seven men.

Yet his own family, none of whom attended the trial, doesn't think Timmendequas deserves any consideration because of his past, which they admit was as bad as it has been por-

"The way we were raised and the household we grew up in has nothing to do with what he's done," said his younger brother, Paul.

"I'm proud they found him guilty," Paul told the Sunday Star-Ledger of Newark. "Jersey has, what, lethal injection? Give me the needle."

If the jury is unable to reach a unanimous verdict for execution, Timmendequas would likely spend the rest of his life in prison. To sentence Timmendequas to death, the jury would have to find that at least one aggravating factor exists and outweighs any mitigating factors such as childhood abuse - presented by

The prosecution will present evidence to support two aggravating factors: that the July 29, 1994, killing occurred during a kidnapping and rape and that the murder was committed to avoid arrest or detection.

The prosecution case will conclude with a victim impact statement, in which a family member speaks to the jury. The statement probably will be read by Maureen Kanka, Megan's mother.

Timmendequas could take the stand or speak to the jury before deliberations begin in a statement that is not subject to cross-examination. He could only plead for his life or express regret.

Capital punishment was reinstated in New Jersey in 1982, but no one has been executed since then.

He's also seeking reimbursement of his medical expenses and unspecified compensation for personal injury. "It's my opinion that the dairy industry's to blame," he said. "They push their dairy products without warning you of the hazards."

Since his stroke three years ago, Mayo drinks only nonfat or skim milk. Neither Safeway nor the state dairy farmers has responded to the lawsuit.

"I'm pretty sure we would plead not guilty and suggest this is without merit," said Blair Thompson, a spokesman for the Washington Dairy Products Commission.

Jon Ferguson, a lead counsel in the state's lawsuit against the tobacco industry, said likening milk with tobacco was silly. Milk, he noted, is not addictive.

Kelly said his recent studies have shown that when TH3 cells, which are growth hormones, are injected into the animal there is a great difference in the cellularity within the animal.

"When we look in the marrow of a young rat, we see good cellularity," he said. "When we look at the marrow of an old rat, all we see is fat which comes from proliferation.

"If we inject TH3 cells into the marrow there is an incredible striking difference in the animals cellularity," Kelly

Kelly said when the TH3 cell growth hormone is injected, observations have shown that the thymus gland can be rejuvenated.

Also, more noon-time users are car pooling to take advantage of the recreation and exercise opportunities including basketball, volleyball, racquetball, squash or an exercise session. We look forward to seeing you this summer!

Nutrition Notes

Marinating Chicken Cuts Carcinogens!

Slathering a marinade on your grilled chicken is not only tasty, but may reduce the level of carcinogens found in the grilled meat.

Dr. Mark Knize and colleagues at the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory in Livermore, California, have found that marinating chicken in a mixture of olive oil, cider vinegar, brown sugar, garlic, mustard, lemon juice, and salt before grilling cuts the amount of one heterocyclic amine called PhIP, by 92-99%, according to a report presented at a recent meeting of the American Chemical Society in San Francisco. Unfortunately, there was also an increase in another type of heterocyclic amine, called MclQx, when the thicken was grilled for more than 30 minutes.

While chicken must be cooked thoroughly to kill any bacteria that might be present, 30 minutes on the grill should do it, say the researchers. Overall, marinating greatly reduces the total amount of detectable heterocyclic amine and grilling just under 30 is ample for eliminating any microbial threats from undercooked chicken, according to a release from the American Chemical Society. The new study was funded by the National Cancer Institute.

Regents seek to change employment requirements

Beginning in the fall, out-of-state and international students who are working between four- and ninetenths time for the University might not be able to pay a reduced fee equivalent to resident fees for their spous-

University work schedules are divided into tenths, and the guidelines in the past have been that students working four-tenths time and above were eligible to receive the special fee equivalent, as were their spouses and children. However, the Kansas Board of Regents has proposed an action to eliminate that benefit for the students' families.

The actual decision to eliminate this benefit was passed by the Regents in June of 1996. However, it didn't go into effect during the 1996-97 school year because it was not published in the Kansas Register in time, said Barb Conant, director of communications for the Kansas Board of Regents.

Judith Siminoe, associate general council for the Kansas Board of Regents, said a system-wide study of fee reductions and waivers was conducted a few years ago, and the concern about how much money was being spent in that area was addressed. "The tuition doesn't pay for the full value of the course work," she said. The more fee waivers and reductions given, the more the tax payers must pay, she said. Siminoe also said there is pressure from the Kansas Legislature to look at out-of-state fee waivers and

"They tend not to like those because out-of-state tuition is obviously higher," she said. If put into effect, the action will save $500,000 for the seven Regents schools in Kansas and should affect about 190 people system-wide, Conant said. About 60 students could be affected at K-State.

The draft of the proposal the Budget Development Committee will be considering June 25 will include a clause excluding continuing students at Regents schools and students who have already committed to a school for the 1997-98 school year from the changes, Conant said.

If the Kansas Board of Regents implements the limitation of the special fee equivalent to resident fees in the fall, about 60 K-State students will be affected.

At the May 13 meeting, Faculty Senate voted to write a letter to the Regents, asking them to reconsider

Richard Elkins, director of admissions and member of Faculty Senate, voted for the letter, though he said he will have to abide by whatever the Regents decide to do.

"I don't make the rules, I carry them out. The Board of Regents has the right to change fees at any time without notice," he said.

Elkins said currently he is trying to get the word out about the action.

"As far as an individual, they (the affected students) have not been notified," he said.

Several international students, who make up the majority of students the new plan would affect, formed a committee to discuss the issue.

"These students wanted to voice their statements and make their complaints," Jim Endrizzi, program coordinator for the International Student Center, said.

The students have gathered information, which has been compiled into a report to be presented to the Regents, Endrizzi said. Twenty international students have also written letters to the Regents, explaining their situations and asking them to reconsider the action. "They are looking for a complete withdrawal of the proposal. They think overall, it's a bad plan," he said.

The students have also collected more than three hundred signatures on a petition that will be submitted to the Regents

According to their report, not only do international students contribute to K-State's research, they also contribute roughly $3.5 million to the Kansas economy

"Although it's affecting a small percentage of students, it also affects the community." Endrizzi said.

Although the Cohen-Esrey Planned Unit Development recommendation has been postponed, the president of the company said he feels residents still do not know all of the facts.

The PUD has been tabled by the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board until September 4.

Tracy Taylor, president of Cohen-Esrey, said public unrest can be common with this type of development.

"It depends. A lot of misinformation can be disseminated. We have attempted to communicate," Taylor said.

The company will discuss rezoning and land use, but is not going to get into a public relations battle, he said. "We will build quality multifaceted housing," he said.

Manhattan was chosen as the building site because of the positive economy, Taylor said. Availability of land, appropriate infrastructure and the marketplace were also factors.

Taylor said the company will build a quality public development that is a significant investment, and it is in the company's interest to maintain the development well. "We want to protect our own investment," Taylor said Cohen-Esrey has applied for annexation and will come before the zoning and planning boards. "We can only control our own perspective," he said.

Karen Davis, community development director, said there are many factors that go into rezoning a piece of land such as the existing use of the property, its stability and the character of the neighborhood.

The Planning Board's job is to decide whether or not to recommend develop-

"The ultimate decision comes down to the city commission," she said.

The Cohen-Esrey development is no different than past groups. The city has a colored map that sets out development policies. Once the plans are appproved by the city commission, developers must comply with regulations. Davis said.

"The fact that it is a Planned Unit Development gives the city flexibility to ask more questions about it,"Davis said.

Komodo dragon, zoo camp bring large crowds to Sunset Zoo

Its table manners are worse than a college student's, and it's currently on display at the Manhattan Sunset Zoo.

A Komodo Dragon, the world's largest lizard species, is visiting the zoo until August 1. The dragon, which is on the endangered species list, is one of 50 dragons living at zoos in the United States.

With a bright-yellow, forked-tongue that moves rapidly in and out of its mouth, it feeds entirely on meat and stalks its prey in Indonesian forests. The dragon can smell its food as far as seven miles away, and its saliva contains microorganisms that kill its prey.

The Komodo Dragon is not the only special attraction this summer. It is only one of almost 300 animals living at the Sunset Zoo.

June, July and August are packed full of activities for all ages. Fathers get in free this Sunday on Father's Day when they're accompanied by a child.

Every Thursday evening, the zoo presents Thursday Night Wild, a program at the Marjorie Loub Wildlife Theatre at 7 p.m. featuring three or four animals. Evening hours allow a chance to view the animals as they prepare for nighttime.

Children's camps and Zooniversity offer youth ages three to nine various educational experiences with a variety of activities.

DENVER - Timothy McVeigh wiped his eye twice as his parents pleaded for his life today, remembering the convicted Oklahoma City bomber as a happy child and a good son. McVeigh listened intently and clasped his hands tightly in front of him through the testimony of the parents, the last witnesses in the defense bid to spare him the death penalty. Jurors looked on grim-faced.

Defense attorney Richard Burr asked him to comment on a picture of the smiling father and son arm in arm several years ago.

"It's a happy Tim. It's the time I remember most of my life," William McVeigh said.

"Do you want him to stay alive?" Burr asked in the last question before the defense rested its four-day penalty-phase case.

"Yes." In rebuttal, prosecutors offered only a letter McVeigh wrote to a New York newspaper in 1992 complaining about rising crime and no fear of punishment. We have no proverbial tea to dump.

Is a civil war imminent? Do we have to shed blood to reform the system? I hope it doesn't come to that, but it might," he

U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch then recessed the trial for the day and told jurors to come back Thursday morning for closing arguments and jury instructions. After that, the panel that convicted McVeigh of murder and conspiracy last week will begin its deliberations to decide whether he should die by injection or get life behind bars for the April 19. 1995, Oklahoma City bombing that killed 168 people. A finding for death must be unanimous.

E-mail, UNIX services to be shut off Sunday

Computer and Networking Services announced UNIX systems will be down for maintenance from midnight until 4 a.m. Sunday.

"We will be applying patches to address some recently discovered security vulnerabilities," Tim Ramsey, UNIX system administrator, said. "We will also be doing other minor hardware maintenance while we have the systems down."

Ramsey declined to mention what security vulnerabilities were being fixed, but said the problem was nothing serious.

The downtime will affect the public UNIX servers, as well as the central campus mail and POP server, which means e-mail will not be able to be sent during these times. In addition, the USENET news server, which gives access to newsgroups, will be down during this time.

Out-of-control bus kills at least 4 people in St. Louis

NORMANDY, Mo. - A city bus driven by a student went out of control Wednesday and struck a crowded train platform on the University of Missouri-St. Louis campus, killing four people.

Two people died at the scene and two were pronounced dead at DePaul Health Center. Several other people were seriously injured in the St. Louis suburb.

Emergency crews were working to determine whether others were trapped underneath the bus. A number of the injured were taken to nearby Normandy Community Hospital, but officials could not immediately comment on how many were being treated.

The bus was pulling into a bus stop next to the train platform when it jumped a curb about 9:15 a.m. It struck the platform on the south side of the campus, where people were waiting for the MetroLink train.

9. BROWNING AVENUE. It runs parallel to Seth Child Road from Claffin Road to Marlatt Avenue, but there are two school zones and a very short stop light at Kimball Drive. It can be difficult turning left from Browning Avenue to Claffin Road. Also, there will be some construction beginning a few blocks north of Kimball Avenue

7. KIMBALL DRIVE. You can use Kimball Drive for easy und access to Seth Child Road, but not northbox

6. WESTPORT DRIVE. Take it as a shortcut from Claffin Road to Anderson Avenue. Avoid it during rush hour traffic ause it's difficult to make left hand turns.

5. FORT RILEY BOULEVARD. It may seem a little out of the way, but it really isn't. The higher speed limit makes up for the extra distance. Taking Fort Riley Boulevard to Seth Child Road is especially good to take when you're a little late for a movie. How many times have you had to wait behind 1.5 cars turning left into Seth Child & Theatres? Why do that, when you wouldn't have to wait by taking a right

4. PARK PLACE APARTMENTS PARKING LOT. Although the speed limit is 20 mph, cutting through the park-ing lot allows for quick access to and from Seth Child Road. 3.WESTLOOP SHOPPING CENTER PARKING LOT. Between Anderson Avenue north to Claffin Drive. There is a lot of traffic and a few speed bumps, but if you need to get from Claffin Road from Anderson Avenue, it's a possibility. 2. DICKENS AVENUE. If you're looking for a way to get on Seth Child Road when you would normally take Claffin Road - look no further. It's a black north of Claffin Road and it runs west from College Avenue to Hudson Avenue.

Seth Child construction continues

Bulldozers, dust-filled air, and orange road cones have been a part of the scenery on Seth Child Road for quite some time now. Heavy construction has been going on since last year in order to widen the road and bridges on Seth Child Road between Fort Riley Boulevard and Marlatt Avenue.

The $10.5 million project started back on March 29,1996. Bayer Construction Co. Inc. of Manhattan is in charge of the

In addition to widening the road and bridges, the project is also making improvements to allow entering and exiting of Seth Child easier for motorists.

"Intersections are being upgraded to provide for new signals and turning lanes," Neil Horton, vice-president and general manager of Bayer Construction Co., said. The intersection of Claffin and Seth Child roads is closed to through traffic on both the east and west sides of the intersection. Signs at the intersection advise motorists to use Anderson Avenue to exit Seth Child Road.

Horton said that the northbound Kimball and Anderson avenues on ramps to Seth Child Road are closed at this time. Reopening of these are unknown. The east side of Gary Avenue is also is closed at the current

The project is expected to have substantial completion by this fall, and final completion by next spring Horton said. Sgt. Saber of the Riley County Police Department, said the construction zone hasn't been the source of many traffic violations. Very few wrecks have taken place in the area, Saber said. The speed limit through the construction area is 35 mph. Motorists seem to be following the speed limits, Saber said.

The Kansas Department of Transportation advises motorists to take the Scenic Drive/Kimball Avenue extension route during busy traffic hours. This is located approximately one mile west of Seth Child Road and connects with Fort Riley Boulevard at its southern point near Manhattan Municipal Airport.

Gene may protect girls against autism, may help develop early social skills

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Girls might outdo boys at some social skills and be less vulnerable to autism because of a gene they inherit from their fathers, a study suggests.

The gene apparently fine-tunes a part of the brain involved in social abilities like interpreting facial expressions and body language, researcher Dr. David Skuse said.

It might also give girls some protection against attention deficit hyperactivity disorder or ADHD, some experts said.

Skuse has not identified this proposed gene or tested it in autism, a condition that impairs a person's communication and interaction with others. The evidence that it exists comes from a study of girls and women with a genetic disorder.

Skuse, director of the behavioral sciences unit at the Institute of Child Health of the University College, London, and his British colleagues made their case in today's issue of the journal Nature.

"I think this is very exciting," said Dr.

Susan Folstein, a psychiatry professor at the Tufts University School of Medicine in Boston, who studies the genetics of autism.

It might explain why autistic boys outnumber autistic girls by at least 4-1, and boys' dominance in ADHD and the reading problem called dyslexia, she said.

But some experts in child development were cautious. It's a big jump to go from the study results to saying anything about autism, ADHD or social skills in boys and girls, said Kathy S. Katz, a pediatric psychologist at the Georgetown University Medical Center.

Skuse's theory is that the gene is thought to lie on the X chromosome, one of the rod-like structures that carry genes. The gene is active in a girl's body, but the copies she passes along to offspring are shut off. With boys, it's just the opposite. The gene is inactive in their bodies, but copies they pass along are turned on.

Girls inherit two copies of the X chromosome, one from each parent. So they'd get an inactive version of the proposed gene from their mother, but a useful one from their father. Boys get only one copy of the X chromosome, and it comes from Mom.

Therefore they get only an inactive version. Skuse and colleagues studied girls and women with a condition called Turner's syndrome, which is having only one X chromosome. Twenty-five participants got it from their dad, and 55 got it from their

Those who got it from their father and so presumably had a working copy of the proposed gene - did better on average than the others when rated on their social skills. For this, their parents filled out a questionnaire asking how much the daughters showed glitches in their social awareness, things like not being aware of others' feelings, not understanding social skills and unknowingly offending people.

When 141 normal children were rated, boys scored worse on average than girls. That suggests boys' social abilities were also hindered because they lacked the active gene, the researchers said.

Manson found guilty of prison drug trafficking, ordered into isolation

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CORCORAN, Calif. - Charles Manson was found guilty of trafficking drugs in prison and his visitation, day room and commissary privileges have been restricted.

Manson was ordered into isolation at a hearing Monday, said Sylvia Gonzalez, a spokesperson for Corcoran State Prison.

Manson tested positive for drugs at least twice, Gonzalez said. She would not identify the drug involved, but she did say he has been under investigation.

In March, Manson, 62, was denied parole for the ninth time in the notorious case.

Manson and members of his hippie cult were convicted in the Aug. 9, 1969, murders of pregnant actress Sharon Tate and friends and the stabbing deaths the next night of Leno and Rosemary LaBianca.

Both crime scenes were marked by bloody scrawlings of messages prosecutors said were an effort to start a race war.

Under administrative segregation, Manson's day room privileges are restricted to three hours twice a week, instead of every day, Gonzalez said.

He will be allowed visitors, she said. Manson may spend only $35 a month at the commissary instead of more than $100, she said.

Parking permits cheaper in summer

BRIAN MCGINLEY

Some students were overcharged for summer parking permits.

Winkler, According to Peggy accounting specialist for Parking Services, the cost of a parking permit for the summer semester is $10. But students who bought their permit before the first day of the summer semester were charged $15 because the new charge didn't take effect until that time.

If a student was charged more than $10 after the first day of the summer semester, they can bring the dated receipt in for a possible refund, Winkler said.

"Also if the student doesn't have the receipt, we can look it up on the computer and deal with each case individually," she said.

The mix up comes from the fact that the price of the permit is pro-rated as time goes by. This is done to save students who buy their permits in the middle of the semester from having to pay for time they didn't own the permits, Winkler said.

If a student bought the permit toward the end of the semester before the final pro-rating or any time before the first day of summer classes, they may have been charged more than they expected.

The cost of a permit for the entire year is $60 and as time goes by, the cost drops. A second semester permit is $35 and it is reduced until the summer semester where the cost is $10, Winkler

K-State's fans losing out on $85,000 for Huskers' poor attendance hy does the University of Nebraska always beat the hell out of our football team? Last October's 39-3 slaughtering should have been enough abuse for 12 months. But now, they're spanking us off the field.

Citing losses incurred from last season's bowl trips, Nebraska - along with the University of Colorado and the University of Texas - will receive relief from the Big 12. Relief to the tune of $85,000 from each of the nine other universities:

It's not official yet, but merely a formality from here on out, K-State President Jon

Nebraska claimed the biggest losses of the three - a $790,000 debt stemming from $1.5 million in travel expenses and insufficient ticket sales. The reason Big Red ended up big in the red is because of its short-sighted fans.

Husker fans figured the "N" on the helmet guaranteed a spot in the national championship game, so they spent their mortgage money on a trip to the Sugar Bowl in New Orleans.

But the Huskers came up lame in the Big 12 championship game against Texas, causing all the national-championship-or-die, Tom Osborne-worshipping "fans" to turn their backs on their team.

As a result of this, K-State, which sent 45,000 fans to this year's Cotton Bowl in Dallas, will have to fork over some serious cash.

Why reward apathy? When K-State was robbed of a Cotton Bowl bid following the 1995 season, 35,000 Catbackers still made it out to the Holiday Bowl in San Diego. We didn't whine about two losses and cry, "Wait until

The refusal by Big 12 "fans" to attend bowls perceived as inferior has given the conference a black eye at the national level, not just within the Bowl Alliance. What major bowl will want to select a Big 12 school used to playing in an Alliance game, knowing half the stadium will be empty?

Well, chalk up another dirty loss to the Huskers. But at least we back our team, and we'll never ask for money.

Putting points to pointless political posturing

Rage against the machine. So goes the name of a popular political rock/alternative band.

But to what end do we rage against the machine? Do we truly feel that if we rage long enough and loud enough, someone in authority will care?

Put simply, no. Most often, when people vent political leanings in a public manner, it does not effect lasting change. Instead, it effects a temporal change. These superficial changes do not last, and that is

The current debate over partial-birth abortion comes to mind. Do not misunderstand - I feel that every type of abortion, no matter how early or late in the pregnancy, is a terrible tragedy. I also feel the only case where an abortion should be performed is to save the life of the mother.

However, the tenor of the current debate is such that the whole issue has become a stage for political posturing, not only by politicians and pundits, but by voices of both conservativism and liberalism alike. What good has the posturing done? How many babies has it actually saved?

The procedure in question is one of the most gruesome acts of murder committed today. Yet, do we really believe by outlawing it that we have suddenly made tremendous headway in the fight for the lives of babies? This battle, like so many others, should begin not in the courtrooms and congress halls, but in the hearts, minds and lives of the people involved.

As long as there are women and girls who believe abortion is an option, there will be abortions - legal or not. Therefore, the logical course of action is not to change laws, but to change hearts.

We see much the same thing in every arena of politics. From welfare reform to the balanced budget, Medicare to the civil rights movement, the theme recurs. Lasting change does not come from the top down, but from the bottom up. Let us take some exam-

If churches did their jobs, we would need no welfare. If people within the church tithed their income, the church could do their job.

If the average American's idea of the American dream was less extravagant and debt-building, maybe the government would be responsible enough to balance their own colossal checkbook.

If we could learn to love our brothers and sisters black, white, yellow, red and brown, young and old we would not need affirmative action.

However, please do not think that I wish to abolish all laws. Laws are necessary to maintain order in a world full of people who have lost their way. However, I feel that to try to change the world by changing the world's laws is terribly misguided.

You see, Martin Luther King Jr. did not change laws he changed minds. He had a dream of all people living together as one. He talked about that dream. He lived that dream. He died for that dream. All of the great reformers have understood the idea of conceptual change, as King did.

Jesus Christ epitomized this radical idea. When Jesus came into the world, he did so as a Jew, thereby subjugating himself to Jewish law.

However, when he saw that the law givers of the time were not going to accept his work among them, he did not take his case before their council, the Sanhedrin, and have them vote on a law to allow him to do what he knew was right. He simply "worked mira-cles, did amazing things and gave signs" (Acts 2:22b).

When a man came to Jesus with a paralyzed hand on the day of worship, according to law, Jesus should not have healed him. However, Jesus did not take the issue before the governing body to find out what they thought of his new idea of doing good on the day of worship. Instead, he asked, "Is it right to do good or do evil on the day of worship — to give a person back his health or let him die?" (Mark 3:4). And then he healed him.

Modern-day Christians would do well to model Jesus' - and Martin Luther King Jr's, for that matter - example of conceptual change. The idea is so astoundingly simple that it's almost frightening. The idea is this - change people's concepts or beliefs about what they see and you will change how they react to what they see. Conceptual change begets governmental change,

If you really want to change the world, you first must change the world's heart.

There were some misleading points raised in your story on June 9 about Northview residents opposed to the CohenEsrey development

First of all, the site is planned to have a total of 112 units in two 56-unit phases. Initially, in phase one, only 56 units will be built. However, the total plan is for 112 twoand three-bedroom apartments, with the possibility of additional phases.

Second, the total land area is slightly more than 10 acres, not 11. And, if you take into consideration land that will be used for improving drainage by increasing the size of the drainage ditch along Casement Road, that reduces the actual usable land area to nearer to nine acres.

Editorial.

The editorial board examines why fans should be upset with the pay-out. See Page 4

K-State stands to lose close to $85,000 in revenue because of poor bowl-game ticket sales by three other Big 12 schools.

Colorado, Nebraska and Texas have all asked the Big 12 for financial relief from losses incurred during the '96-'97 bowl season, and K-State Athletics Director Max Urick said he expects the bylaw change to

"It's sure going to cost us some bucks," Urick said. "There is an allowance in the bylaws: It just isn't enough."

Neither Colorado nor Texas could sell its ticket allocations, and both took big hits in they'd be in the national championship game, their wallets. Nebraska was in the same boat, Urick said, but had the biggest problem of the three schools.

Many Cornhusker fans were locked into Sugar Bowl packages for the national championship game on Jan. 1. However, when the Huskers lost the Big 12 championship game to Texas, they were knocked out of the national championship game, and many fans were left with non-refundable ticket packages.

It was a problem K-State President Jon Wefald said he could relate to.

"In the case of Nebraska, there is an understanding we should have. They assumed and the fans made reservations," Wefald said. "I can understand that."

And apparently, so can other Big 12 athletics directors. The motion easily passed in a vote among conference athletics directors.

Urick, however, said he did not go down without a fight.

"I'm not encouraged by this action," Urick said. "There was a lot of spirited discussion, and my side did not prevail."

The final vote will come from the presidents of each school, but Wefald said he did not expect a change in outcome.

"That will be more of a technicality," Wefald said. "It's my experience that the votes will break down pretty much the same

What could be more damaging than the financial losses incurred is the harm done to the conference reputation, Urick said.

Poor tickets sales led to some half-empty stadiums, and hosting cities didn't draw the expected number of people.

"I think it's very dangerous," Urick said. "It reflects very poorly on the Big 12 conference. They want people.

Wefald said the poor ticket sales were not indicative of the success of the conference or "Ordinarily, Nebraska will have 25,000 fans at a bowl game. You can just look at their track record," Wefald said. "I wouldn't be critical of any of the three schools."

Although this bylaw change could come back to help K-State in the future, football fan's support of the team could drop off after the high of the Jan. 1 Cotton Bowl. Wefald said he couldn't envision this situation with K-State fans.

Urick said he admits there is a problem at hand, but he isn't convinced the other schools should bear so much of the burden.

"There is a problem. What is the right thing to do?" Urick said. "I am not sure."

Living less than 100 feet from City Park, Rich said Heath always watched the ball games and always wanted to be a part of them. It was not until the summer after his first-grade year, however, that Heath got his chance.

It may have been only tee-ball, but it was a start. This is Heath after all.

His parents said he was one of the only people that knew what to do on the diamond, and because of that early knowledge, he experienced early success.

The first time Heath hit a ball in a live game, it was a home run.

"He knew what to do," Rich said. "He hit the ball to the outfield and knew he was supposed to run all the way around the K-State single-season record with 16 home runs this season hit a home run in his first ever at-bat.

And from that first game, Rich and Bobbi rarely missed a game. They both were in charge of the concession stand for one season. Rich helped rake the field before each game.

"We loved that part of it," Bobbi said. "That's what it was all about."

In fact, baseball had no geographic

K-State men's basketball players follow the guidance of Coach Tom Asbury, in the hope of eventually taking a step up to the next level

Now, one of his assistant coaches is getting the same kind of help from Asbury David Campbell wants to someday step up to a head coaching position. On Monday,

Asbury promoted Campbell, who followed him to K-State from Pepperdine in 1994, to associate head coach in order to help further Campbell's career goals.

Campbell's duties will evolve into more on-court work and less recruiting, but the move will probably not affect the team's performance, Asbury said. Instead, the effect the added responsibilities and title will have is making Campbell more marketable in the headcoaching market.

"This is something that's done to reward people for their loyalty to a program," he said. "He's been in line for this for a while now. This is the next step for him.

Campbell has been coaching under Asbury since 1988, when he joined his staff at Pepperdine.

He also worked as an assistant at Weber State for the 1987-88 season, and at St. Mary's from 1982 through 1987. He graduated from St. Mary's in 1980 after lettering in basketball three times.

Now, as an associate coach, Campbell said he's excited about the possibilities this promotion brings. "It's a really good honor for me," he said. "It's one that should help me to reach my ultimate goal, and that's to be a head coach.

Campbell said he looked at other positions, but he likes the high visibility of his new role.

Campbell was a candidate for the St. Mary's head coaching job, but things didn't work out, so Asbury said he promoted him to help him advance to what he's capable of doing.

"He's ready right now," Asbury said. "He's been ready to be a head coach for

SALT LAKE CITY - Michael Jordan showed everyone how the best players win the biggest games.

Jordan, playing despite a flu that had him vomiting until just before game time, scored 38 points and made a huge 3-pointer with 25 seconds left to lead the Chicago Bulls to a 90-88 victory over the Utah Jazz on Wednesday night in Game 5 of the NBA Finals. Jordan scored 15 points in the final quarter and moved the Bulls within one victory of their fifth championship this decade. They can get it Friday night in Game 6 at the United Center as the series moves back to Chicago. "Sometimes you've got to come out and do what you've got to do," Jordan said. "We wanted it real bad and me as a leader had to do my best, and hopefully the team would have to rally around me." The Jazz, who had taken over the momentum in the series by winning the two previous games, got a lesson in making the big plays at the big moments.

And they learned their lesson the hard way by repeatedly botching things down the stretch to have their 23-game home winning streak bro-

Karl Malone scored only one basket in the fourth quarter, shot an airball — a bad airball — on his final attempt with about a minute left and then failed to commit a foul when Utah needed to stop the clock.

It was quite a contrast to the way Jordan performed when his team needed him most, even the way he responded to his one mortal moment.

Jordan, whose eyes looked so tired and who spent a lot of time bent over tugging on his shorts, went to the free throw line with 46 seconds left with a chance to put Chicago ahead by one. He made the first and missed the second, then charged into the lane and picked up the loose ball after it was batted around. The Bulls reset their offense and passed the ball inside to Scottie Pippen posting up, and he threw it out to Jordan when he was about to be double-teamed. Jordan calmly swished the 3pointer to give Chicago an 88-85

This is the first time since Major League Baseball began in 1876 that teams from opposite leagues will face each other on the baseball diamond in regular season play. For now, interleague play will only be a one-

More executions scheduled in Texas

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HUNTSVILLE, Texas - A man convicted of killing a couple at a lovers' lane during a $15 robbery became on Wednesday the 21st person to be put to death in Texas this year, surpassing the state's annual record set in 1935.

Earl Behringer, 33, was condemned for the 1986 shooting deaths of Daniel Meyer Jr., 22, an Army lieutenant, and Meyer's fiance, Janet Hancock, 21,1a high school and college classmate of Behringer.

Before his execution by injection, Behringer said: "It's a good day to die. I walked in here like a man. I am leaving here a man."

Behringer, with a Bible on his chest, thanked family members and friends and then turned to the six members of his victims' families who watched.

"I am sorry for any pain I have caused you," he said. "If my death gives you any peace, so be it." He added that he was thankful to the Dallas Cowboys football team "for giving me a lot of enjoyment these past years." Texas leads the nation in executions and accounts for more than one-third of all executions in the United States since the Supreme Court allowed the death penalty to resume in 1976.

Orientation eases transition for new students

BRIAN MCGINLEY

Student orientation kicks off Thursday when the first group of new students arrive on cam-

Orientation, scheduled for June 12 - 27, is offered to help students get acquainted with the campus and the enrollment process.

Organizers expect more than 250 students for each day of the 12-day program, Susan Hansen, assistant director of New Student Services, said.

The day starts off with students dividing up and meeting with orientation leaders who have been divided into colleges. The students go to their college of choice, where they take part in a program called Tips for Success.

Students learn what it takes to succeed at college in a smaller group setting, Hansen said. The groups will discuss properly using the enrollment process and the services offered on

After meeting with the orientation leaders and going through the program, students will watch a series of skits and a panel discussion by orientation leaders called the K-State Show, which is an entertaining way of conveying information, Hansen said.

This year, the show's theme is Daytime Live and is written and performed entirely by the orientation leaders. The skits mimic daytime TV, and each one deals with a different aspect of student life. The topics range from residence life to academic life.

The final step for students is going to colleges and setting up their schedules. Advisers meet with students at this time and set their college careers on track.

"This is a program that we look forward to and work hard to accomplish, we're excited to get going," Hansen said.

The orientation leaders are made up of 18 K-State students who have been around the process and know what it takes to succeed.

Kelly Kiefer, senior in public relations, said she has been an orientation leader for the past two years and looks forward to each day.

"New students are very excited, and it's a great, positive experience," she said.

City Commission restructures economic fund

NAKIA Y. WALLER

An effort by the Manhattan City Commission to promote jobs, business and industry is being restructured after a local screen printing business applied for economic development funds to expand their business and add jobs.

In March 1997, It's Greek to Me applied for a $400,000 job incentive grant and a $200,000 participatory loan. Last week, however, the city commission denied It's Greek To Me the funds in a overwhelming vote.

The Economic Advisory Board, however, had approved the application submitted by It's Greek To Me

Karen McCulloh, city commissioner, said she felt the difference in opinions had to do with the goals of the separate voting bodies. The economic advisory board evaluated the potential for economic prosperity while the city commission evaluated the political benefits the applicant would bring.

The job incentive grant was designed to bring 60 new jobs to Manhattan, "Personally, I was concerned with the quality of the jobs created. They appeared to be entry-level and part-time jobs. The problem then would not just be local but regional," McCulloh said.

In a meeting of the Manhattan Economic Development Opportunity Fund Advisory Board May 5, Steve Ballard of Ballard's Sporting Goods said he was concerned about the reprucussions of giving a local business funds to compete with other local funds.

"If you give him a new facility, then I want you to give me a new facility also," he said. "I don't think local funds should give a competitive advantage to a local competitor."

The participatory loan that It's Greek to Me applied for would be for the purchase of the old Manko building at 520 McCall Road. Manko Window Systems Inc. received economic development funds from the city and moved into a new building, yet retained ownership of their old building. The building would be purchased from Manko, not the city.

Two years ago, an economic development fund was established to attract jobs and business to the Manhattan area. The fund was developed from The Mayor's Economic Task Force Report, issued in April 1994.

An one half cent sales tax increase was established in February 1995 to finance the plan. The tax, which would raise $10 million dollars over four years, would be issued to interested businesses in the form of grants and loans.

The goal of the task force was to promote recruitment and relocation, existing enterprise and K-State, among other things. The fund requirements, however, did not exclude local businesses from applying.

City commissioners will try to structure the goals governing the approval of economic development funds closer to its original purpose at the June 24

Lafene computer system crash proves vexing

BRIAN MCGINLEY staff reporter

Computer troubles over the weekend caused problems for workers at Lafene Health Center. The computer system, which has been repaired, is fairly new and should not be having these kinds of problems, officials said. Over the weekend, four out of the nine concentrators on the system shut down. Concentrators communicate information between terminals or work stations and the servers. The fact that they're down doesn't affect the information that is already in the system, Sally Sowell, director of administrative services at Lafene, said.

Lafene employees were not sure what was causing the recent problems with the concentrators, but Sowell said finding out is the top priority so it doesn't continue to happen.

'All the information is still there. We haven't lost any, and there is no risk of losing any," she said. "It was business as usual, and none of the services were stopped."

The biggest problem staff frustration. Things were a bit slower, and they had to go back to the manual system used as a backup in situations like this, Sowell said.

The shut down affected daily tasks, such as being able to electronically order lab x-rays and printing pharmacy labels.

Lafene uses an IBM system, and it is under contract. As soon as the problem was discovered an individual from IBM responded. The correct parts were air-freighted as soon as possible, and things were back in order by early afternoon Tuesday, Sowell said.

IBM officials said they thought the problems, which are occurring at night, may be a result of a power surge coming in from an outside source. As a result, Lafene officials have asked K-State Facilities to monitor the power coming into the building.

Artist returns to K-State to feature Native American art

A former K-State student publicly presented his artwork for the first time at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art Tuesday

A small audience gathered in the UMB Theatre to give its attention to Bruce Arvizu, an interstate truck driver who resides in Topeka. Arvizu, part Native American, stood behind the podium in his Camel T-shirt and overalls.

"I am not the stereotypical Native American artist," he

The traditional representations of the American Indian were limited in his work. Arvizu said Native American art is not just feathers and warriors on horseback.

It is not fair to allow a politically correct standard to limit what American Indian art is, he said.

Arvizu showed a graphite nude of a young woman, and he asked if it was considered Native-American art.

The painting depicts an old Indian man and a young warrior. He described it as an intertwining between the old and the new "The old represents the

Clinton has asked for stiffer penalties against adults who sell guns to kids and an expansion of the Brady law to cover juveniles

WASHINGTON - Hoping to disarm teen gangs, President Clinton ordered new regulations today forcing licensed gun dealers to post signs and give buyers written warnings against passing off firearms

"I want every adult who buys a gun to see that sign and think about it before they give a child a gun that could wind up in gang violence," Clinton said in outlining the directive, which is to be carried out through formal Treasury Department rules. "Guns are the gangs that strike the hearts of our communities and families," the president added. He wa at Georgetowr to a youth vio ence of law en cers, child ad control activis While crit

Clinton's directive comes as the Senate takes its turn at drafting juvenile crime legislation in the wake of a House-passed bill that rebuffed several Clinton initiatives opposed by the gun lobby.

"A juvenile crime bill that doesn't crack down on guns and gangs, that doesn't guarantee more prosecutors, more probation officers and more 'prevent programs' after school is a juvenile crime bill in name only," the president said. On Tuesday, White House spokesman Mike McCurry stopped short of a veto threat in making clear that Clinton expected the Senate to approve his gun-control proposals and work them into final legislation before it reaches his desk 'Any juvenile justice bill that does not include tough anti-gang provisions and tough provisions on gun violence is not going to cut it with him," McCurry said. Clinton had asked for penalties against transferring uns to kids, an expansion of the Brady law to prevent violent juveniles from owning firems as adults and a requirement that

Software foes join to reassure Web users

WASHINGTON - Most people who browse the World Wide Web don't know the sites they visit can collect personal information about them, but federal regulators are closely eyeing such privacy

Trying to forestall any new rules, Microsoft Corp. and Netscape Communications Corp. put their rivalry aside Wednesday to announce a joint plan to help safeguard consumer data on the

The proposal by the two largest makers of software for browsing the Internet was just the latest in a steady stream of programs announced this week by companies worried about a government crack-

But the fact that archrivals Netscape and Microsoft lowered their swords was likely to catch the eye of Federal Trade Commission officials at privacy hearings this week in Washington. The two companies are locked in battle for supremacy on the Internet, with each trying to make its own software standards prevail.

Their agreement on a common privacy format reflected the deepened concern among Internet companies that federal rules could stifle electronic commerce. Netscape's Navigator and Microsoft's Internet Explorer software basically control the portholes for how millions of Americans search for information on the Web and buy products ranging from books to computers.

Privacy advocates are pushing for government curbs in part because of the increased use of technology that can track a computer user's recently visited Web sites, the pages the user looked at and even the person's hobbies - and then link that information to the user's name and address.

The owners of Web sites can then sell that information to advertisers and other interested parties without the consent or knowledge of the computer user. Microsoft joined a plan that was first proposed by Netscape and two other Internet software companies, Firefly Network Inc. and Verisign Inc., two weeks ago. About 100 Internet businesses were listed as supporters of the proposal.

Their "open profiling standard" envisions new Web software that would allow computer users to determine what sort of personal information they are willing to share and with which Web sites.

For example, users could specify on their browsers whether they want to reveal their hobbies and other interests. It also would enable the creation of a "digital certificate" - information stored on the computer user's hard drive that immediately identifies a user when clicking on a Web site.

Microsoft and Netscape officials said they have submitted the plan to the World Wide Web Consortium, a nonprofit group that sets standards for Internet technology.

The Microsoft-Netscape plan is intended to fit into a broader initiative by the consortium, which envisions a sort of common language by Web sites and users for controlling the information they share with online firms

The FTC plans to use findings gathered from this week's hearings to determine whether it needs to recommend online privacy laws to Congress. Some regulators at the hearings voiced support for self-policing programs by businesses.

Man accused of having sex with girls after meeting on computer

OMAHA, Neb. - A 24-year-old man who talked about sex with young girls through his computer is accused of sexually assaulting four of the teen-age children after meeting them in Troy Sisler of Bellevue was charged Wednesday in Douglas County Court with first-degree sexual assault for the alleged attack of a 14-year-old Omaha girl last December.

He also is suspected of assaulting three other girls in the area.

Bellevue Police Sgt. Bill McClintick said Sisler is set to be charged Thursday in Sarpy County Court with two counts of first-degree sexual assault and sexual assault of a child. He is accused there of raping two girls, ages 13 and 15, while they were alone in their Bellevue

Sisler allegedly met his victims through a bulletin board he operated from his home called "Shadows of Eternity," McClintick said.

"The primary topic on his bulletin board was sex," the investigator said. "It was a sex talk site and those girls knew how to get in

The 14-year-old Omaha victim told police Sisler contacted her via computer and arranged a meeting at the Crossroads Mall where he allegedly sexually assaulted her, Sgt. Jim Deignan said.

In the Bellevue cases, Sisler allegedly found out when the girls were home alone and had sex with them when .heir families were away, McClintick said.

"It sounds like he would put out a computer notice that he would have a party at a local pizza restaurant and there he would find out more about the victims including their names, phone numbers and where they lived," McClintick said

Authorities were alerted after one of the victims told a professional counselor about Sisler, McClintick said.

Police delivered a search warrant at Sisler's home Tuesday and confiscated his computer equipment. Deignan said he was arrested Wednesday while working at First Data Resources.

Sisler waived a preliminary hearing Wednesday and was being held in Douglas County Jail on $25,000 bond.

The crimes happened about the same time a senior airman at Offutt Air Force Base near Bellevue ran off with a 14-year-old New York girl he met over the Internet.

Senior Airman Brooker Maltais, 22, faces nine charges in addition to desertion including statutory rape, sodomy, contributing to the delinquency of a minor and committing indecent acts with a minor.

The cases are not linked.

Bombing victims speak out against death penalty

OKLAHOMA CITY - A man who lost his daughter in the Oklahoma City blast joined death penalty opponents Wednesday in urging only a life sentence for the convicted bomber, saying "even Timothy McVeigh, has a soul."

'This is a real test of a human being," said Bud Welch, whose daughter, Julie, was one of the 168 people killed in the April 19, 1995, bombing. "I have examined my conscience. I have examined it time and time again."

Welch spoke at a news conference with groups that oppose the ultimate punishment, just a day before a federal jury in Denver was to begin deliberating whether McVeigh should die by injection or be sentenced to life behind bars for the bombing, the deadliest terrorist attack on U.S. soil.

As Julie Marie used to say as we drove from Oklahoma City to Milwaukee taking her to college, 'Dad, the death penalty has no social value at all. All it does is teach our children hate'." he said: In Denver, Marsha Kight, whose daught Frankie Merrill, died in the federal building's daycare center, said she also opposed to putting McVeigh to death.

"I couldn't look anybody in the eye and say" I'm going to take your life'," she said. "I don't want to be on that level. I don't want to get on the level of McVeigh."

"Unlike Timothy McVeigh, our loved opes h no trial, no defense, no time to visit with fami members or correspond with friends," the statement said. "They were, without warning, judged and executed by Timothy McVeigh."

A Harris Poll released Wednesday found percent of Americans want McVeigh to be exe ed and 32 percent favor life behind bars. The p of 1,000 adults indicates capital punishment gen-> erally has more support than in prior decades. Results have a margin of error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.

KSU theater provides summer show

Every Thursday and Friday during June and July, the K-State Theatre will feature comedies at 8 p.m. in

The first performance will begin tonight with two comedies, titled "Sister Mary Ignatius Explains It All For You," and "The Actor's Nightmare." Each is a oneact play lasting about an hour.

'We chose to focus on comedies, because nobody would want to sit through 'Death of a Salesman' during the summer. They want to laugh and have fun," Charlotte MacFarland, director of summer theater pro-

"Charley's Aunt" will be presented at 8 p.m. June 19. The play tells the story of three college students who attempt to have three women over to their place without any trouble from an aunt.

It wasn't a coincidence that K-State is performing a play with a college plot.

'We wanted to have shows that college students will enjoy," MacFarland said.

Despite the demands of performing many plays in a short period of time, the actors don't seem to mind. Many students are able to put more time into acting during the summer, since most don't have to worry a busy schedule. 'It's more intensive in the summer, but less stressful," Scott Chamoff, graduate student in theater, said.

Rehearsals are conducted like they are in professional acting companies. The actors rehearse six days a week, with a few breaks each day.

"It's about the same amount of hours as any nineto-five job," MacFarland said.

Since the theater's beginning, locals have become more involved in performances. "Parents have definitely been more involved,

They want to see their kids perform, along with others who may know them," Meade said. The theater is also seeking a student perspective to integrate their work into the community. "We're hoping to get more students from K-State, but their theater program would rather have them stay there to perform," Meade said. Meade said the summer schedule would benefit college students in particular.

"Summer performances would help the students stick more to their college schedule," Meade said. Since the theater belongs to the Actors Equity Association, many of the actors are professionals from New York and other places in the East.

The association requires the theatre to maintain this balance of professional actors and local actors. Casting is still going on for "Tuna Christmas," to be performed over the holidays.

MTV movie award show offers popcorn buckets to odd group of winners

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SANTA MONICA, Calif. - It's like, you know, just for fun. That and an excuse to throw a wicked cool party

Ahh, the MTV Movie Awards - the annual gathering in which the mouthpiece of the Beavis and Butt-head generation pays homage to such cinematic milestones as Best Kiss (next year, Best Grope?), Best Fight, Best Villain and Best Breakthrough Performance.

And, of course, itself. Where's the Irving G. Thalberg Award when you really need it?

This year's ceremony, hosted by Mike "Shagadelic, Baby!" Myers and taped in a converted airplane hangar, featured such MTV luminaries as Jenny McCarthy and Kennedy and the musical acts EnVogue, Bush and Jewel, along with the actual movie world's Jim Carrey, Mira Sorvino, Matthew McConaughey, Cameron Diaz, Will Smith; Samuel L. Jackson, Salma Hayek, Claire Danes and Renee Zellweger.

Carrey won two awards - golden popcorn buckets - for his creepy turn in "The Cable Guy." In accepting his Best Villain award, he got MTV censors busy by declaring he was a "bad mother ..."

Then, in front of a howling audience, he grabbed his crotch. When called back as winner for the Best Comedic Performance award, he enveloped presenter Alicia Silverstone and gave her an emphatic and apparently unscripted - kiss.

McConaughey won the Best Breakthrough Performance award for "A Time to Kill"; Danes got the Best Female Performance award for "William Shakespeare's Romeo & Juliet"; Tom Cruise won Best Male Performance for "Jerry Maguire"; Will Smith and Vivica Fox received the Best Kiss Award for "Independence Day"; the band Bush won Best Song for "Machinehead" from "Scream"; Best Fight honors went to Fairuza Balk and Robin Tunney for "The Craft": and Nicolas Cage and Sean Connery got the Best Screen Duo in "The Rock." The awards are picked by the MTV viewers themselves, so while they may not have that patina of Oscar gold, they could arguably be somewhat more indicative of the tastes of a key moviegoing demographic - those twentysomethings who crowd theaters every Friday and Saturday night. Consider: "The English Patient," which snagged the bulk of the Academy Awards, wasn't even nominated here. And just what did take home the Movie" award? The teen thriller "Scream."

The award show will be broadcast on MTV this week and repeated regularly throughout the weekend and sporadically for the next few

Do the awards hold much weight in the movie industry? Probably not, say most observers.

"I can't imagine anyone saying, 'Let's see this movie, it won an MTV award," says Jim Welsh, editor of the Literature/Film Quarterly.

But, as Claire Danes said at the party after, "They're just fun!"

Workshop teaches decision-making skills

LANCE ZIESCH

Potential student leaders gathered last Friday in Manhattan for three days of intense workshops as part of the 1997 North Kansas Hugh O'Brian Youth Foundation Leadership Seminar.

HOBY was founded in 1958 by actor Hugh O'Brian. It is a non-profit organization that recognizes and develops leadership potential in high-school sophomores in both public and private schools in the United States and abroad. Kansas is divided into two HOBY regions, north and south.

One sophomore from each of the region's schools is eligible for the seminar, if they are nominated by their school and certified by their principal.

Scott Riekeman, North Kansas leadership seminar chairperson, said HOBY's goal is to encourage the students to think for themselves. There is no specific knowledge that we want them to leave with. Each learns their own thing. We just give them the tools and the knowledge to become good leaders," he said. Andrew Bell, an ambassador from Tescott High School, said he learned a lot about what it takes to be a good leader.

"What they stressed the most is going after a dream and sticking with it," he said. "If you have a dream, go out and try to fulfill it. Don't give up."

Emily Dreiling, an ambassador from Thomas More Prep said, "It taught us a lot about making decisions on what we want to do and how we are going to get there. It's choosing the right thing, when the pressure's on to do something different." Dreiling said when they arrived at the seminar, everyone was nervous. By the end of the day, they were hugging people they didn't even know, she said. "Really, it was just bonding.

We came out as a team," she said. HOBY is designed to allow students to take what they learn at the seminar and apply it when they return home. One idea Dreiling would like to see implemented in her own hometown is a crisis line.

"We don't have a crisis line in our town, and I think that could be beneficial for people," she said.

From every HOBY seminar, one boy and girl are selected to represent their seminar at the nine-day international HOBY conference in Indianapolis. Because of her outstanding leadership abilities, Dreiling was one of two picked to represent the North Kansas Seminar next

Dreiling said one of the things she liked most about the seminar was the interaction with other student leaders who face the same kinds of problems she

"Leadership roles can be lonely sometimes, and looking out onto the crowd of ambassadors from all over the state, it really will give you hope," she said. "Our future really is in good hands."

The team of 11-year-olds made the front page of the Manhattan Mercury. The whole thing happened so fast, Bobbi still has problems recalling

"It's just a blur now," she said. "It's amazing."

Focused on Baseball

Baseball wasn't Heath's only sports passion. Soccer was a favorite at an early age, until a slip at an early-morning practice landed Heath in the emergency room with a broken hand.

Not only did Heath miss the rest of the soccer season, but also the following baseball season, That is what his parents said really hurt him.

"I think that pretty much ended his soccer

So, he tried basketball for a while. Rich said he enjoyed a few decent seasons as a guard, but when basketball began to conflict with baseball, it was so long to the hardwood.

"He was focused on baseball at a very early

So focused that when he qualified for a major junior-golf tournament, he simply did not go. He had baseball practice.

"He found out he couldn't do them all," Bobbi said. "So he had to choose baseball." It was a choice he carried through two junior-varsity and two varsity seasons at Manhattan High School. After playing almost every position on the field in previous season, it was then he found his true position.

"The coach just pointed to him and said, 'You're my shortstop," Rich said. "He's been

In fact, he fared so well at his new position that the New York Mets drafted him in the 70th round out of high school.

It was an option Heath never really pursued. He had other plans for the fall, even though it did set the stage for a professional career for Heath.

"They saw a lot of potential in Heath," Rich said. "It helps you realize what they're looking Still, the Schessers rarely missed a game. Home games were mandatory. Road trips were regular. Nothing had really changed in the mind of the Schessers. But the Schessers said there was always one dream that carried Heath throughout his baseball career: He wanted to go to the pros.

After being named first-team all-Big 12 this past season as a shortstop, the possibility of that jump became apparent.

Even with all the high-round predictions, the Schessers were far from confident.

"The first question is will he be drafted at all," Rich said. "We were hopeful, but didn't know for

So, how did Heath react when the Detroit

Tigers called in with the fifth-round selection? "He just smiled and said, 'Detroit, fifthround," Rich said. "Five minutes later he was in his car and headed to Hays."

Heath had a baseball game that night with a summer team and didn't have time to even savor the moment. There were games to be played. It was the last game he would ever play with his summer-league team.

When the Detroit Tigers came to Heath with an offer, the Schessers were very satisfied with

"They're going to pay for the rest of his col-lege," Rich said. "It's enough money where you feel they're making a serious offer.'

Just days later Heath signed and was off to a Still watching

The Schessers are not ready to stop watching Heath's career.

Two trips are already set to Jamestown to watch Heath, because this is a baseball family, through and through.

It's just what they do.

Bobbi will keep updated on Heath's success via the Jammers' homepage. They will be removed by space, not heart.

But for the first summer in a long time, there is no baseball career to watch blossom in Manhattan. There still, however, is the sport they both know and love.

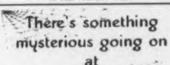

"Until then we'll just walk across the street and watch some of the city league games," Bobbi

"We'll still be watching baseball. That will have to satisfy us."

McVeigh jurors reflect on decision to issue death sentence

For 2 1/2 months, they sat side by side, listening to the story of the worst act of terrorism on U.S. soil unfold.

They heard former friends of Timothy McVeigh's tell of his preparations for the Oklahoma City bombing, his plan to avenge the deaths of about 80 people in a government raid near Waco, Texas.

Many cried as people talked of loved ones who perished, and rescuers talked of nightmares that never vanish.

They struggled for days before convicting, then condemning McVeigh to death - two one-vote, unanimous judgments that changed their lives.

At the end, the jurors - who addressed reporters Saturday, one day after sentencing McVeigh to death in the April 19, 1995, bombing - were left with one question for McVeigh:

Christopher Tritico, one of McVeigh's defense attorneys, said Sunday that the jurors' comments helped him realize they made the right decision to keep McVeigh from testify-

"They wanted Tim to get up there in the punishment phase ... (but) then you waive every issue on appeal so what's the point?" he said. "I think they all clearly said it wouldn't have mattered, that it wouldn't have changed their minds.

McVeigh, 29, was being held

Sunday in the Federal Correctional Institution in suburban Jefferson Tritico said he and the other members of the defense team are contemplating which issues would be the best to use for an appeal.

Among those they are examining are the judge's rulings, including his ban on the introduction of a defense theory that foreign terrorists were involved in the bombing and his restriction of evidence about alleged FBI crime lab contaminarange of life and career experiences -

McVeigh's jurors - who had a wide spent four days challenging every single facet of this case, said foreman James Osgood, a product marketing manager. In the end, it was more difficult to reach the guilty verdict than it was for the death sentence, the jurors said.

"You go into this assuming McVeigh is innocent. The most shocking blow to all of us, I know to me personally, was that 'Yeah, he's guilty.' And it just hit home right there," Roger Brown, a retired Air Force veteran, said.

Ruth Meier, a retired retail worker, said, "Twelve people cried when we pronounced him guilty. It took us a good hour, hour and a half to calm ourselves down that we could go into the courtroom again."

Said Osgood, "I think we can all sleep better at night, knowing that the system does work.' The decision to impose a death sentence is one of the most difficult jurors have to make, said Joseph L. Hoffmann,

Sullivan, 23, called to a resident of the apartment complex from her car in the parking lot because she was having trouble breathing. The Memphis, Tenn., native was unconscious when police and paramedics arrived.

Tom Eblen, general manager and news adviser for the Kansan staff, said Sullivan was to complete her degree by the end of next month

She and design editor Bryan Volk had dropped off the page designs for the next day's Kansan to be printed that morning when she began coughing, which didn't seem serious at the time, Eblen said. She had dropped Volk off at his apartment before having the attack.

HISTORY

IVAN KOZAR/Collegian WADE HARPER, Manhattan area resident, 11, participates in a tug-of-war competition during the Juneteenth community celebration. The celebration took place Saturday afternoon at Long's Park to celebrate the emancipation of Texas slaves.

Juneteenth emancipation celebration promotes intellectual, spiritual traditions

NAKIA Y. WALLER

Area residents commemorated the emancipation of Texas slaves at the Manhattan-area Juneteenth Community Celebration at Long's Park Saturday.

On June 19, 1865, Texas slaves were freed by 1,800 U.S. troops, more than two and a half years after President Lincoln signed the Emancipation Proclamation.

A year after the delayed emancipation of Texas slaves, black Texans began the Juneteenth celebration, and it has continued throughout the years. The purpose of the celebration, which has spread across the nation, is to promote intellectual and spiritual traditions passed down through generations along with art, music and dance.

"We're here to celebrate the emancipation from slavery and promote African-American awareness and that we are here in Manhattan. We need to be aware of the history and go forward," Venessa Hope, area merchant, said.

Historical displays, artist and information booths provided onlookers with the history of Juneteenth and the history of blacks in the United States.

'We're looking to get the word out to the African-American community. We're a grassroots organization whose goal is to reach people who get some kind of assistance to live on," Kay Glenn, board member of Speak United, said.

Activities were planned for people of all ages. There was storytelling and tug-of-war for the children and a choir from Junction City to provide musical entertainment.

Many of the youth participated by either lending a hand to help set up or putting on a fashion show of the latest styles.

"It brings us all together, and we learn," Ruthie Dennis, fashion show participant, said. "It's a positive thing to do, and we have fun.

BIKING ACROSS MANHATTAN

PARTICIPANTS in Biking Across

Kansas ride down Scenic Drive, just west of Manhattan, Friday afternoon. The riders average 65 miles a day. The entire trip is about 500 miles in length. IVAN KOZAR

Bikes lined the hallways, clothes hung from tree branches and handlebars and sleeping bags covered the gym floor at Susan B. Anthony Middle School last Thursday.

The school served as the temporary home for participants in the 23rd annual Biking Across Kansas tour that stopped overnight in Manhattan.

This year's BAK started in Goodland June 7 and finished Saturday in Atchison.

The program was founded in 1975. Riders ranged in age from 7 to 82 years old and represented 30 states and 3 foreign countries. They average 65 miles a day, but each day ranged from 45 to 80 miles total. The entire trip is about 500 miles and takes 8 days.

Larry Christie, who founded the program with his wife, Norma, said the idea formed from all the interest in the Bikecentennial in 1974. He said he and his wife wanted to participate, but couldn't take three months off of work to make the trip.

"We decided to go across Kansas, figuring on

SAN DIEGO - President Clinton opened a year-long campaign against racism Saturday with a defense of affirmative action and a plea for Americans to confront and erase their most deeply held prejudices.

"Emotions may be rubbed raw, but we must

Jury returns guilty verdict in Coast Guard rape case

NEW ORLEANS - A Coast Guard petty officer was convicted Saturday of raping and sodomizing a female colleague.

Petty Officer 2nd Class Darrell Stirewalt was also convicted of adultery, indecent assault and other charges involving a total of five women assigned to a Coast Guard cutter base in Alabama.

Stirewalt, who is married, could be sentenced to life in prison on the rape conviction and given a dishonorable discharge. The penalty phase is to begin today.

Stirewalt stood at attention as the verdict was read but slumped into his seat after the jury left the courtroom. His lawyer said he would appeal.

The offenses involved personnel assigned to the cutter Sweetgum between October 1995 and January 1997. All five victims testified against him.

Stirewalt, 26, of Clemson, S.C., a health services technician, pleaded innocent to all 17 charges - one count each of rape and sodomy, three counts of assault consummated by battery, and four each of indecent assault, maltreatment and adultery.

Man charged in police shooting escapes from jail

GREAT BEND - An escaped jail prisoner charged with shooting a police officer was captured Saturday, along with a second escapee from the Barton County Jail.

Timothy Burge, 27, and Dennis Galliart Jr., 22, were captured about noon in a rural area east of Great Bend in central Kansas, Barton County Sheriff's Staff Sgt. David Smith said.

The two surrendered peacefully to a canine unit and deputies on horseback, Smith said.

They escaped about 9:30 p.m. Friday after Galliart overpowered a jailer when he was released from his cell to make a phone call, Smith said. The inmate forced the jailer to open Burge's cell, and the two men fled on foot.

Israel's Supreme Court rejects appeal to indict Netanyahu

JERUSALEM - Israel's Supreme Court on Sunday rejected an appeal to charge Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu with fraud in an influence-peddling scandal that had threatened to topple his government.

In a 4-1 decision, the court ruled that prosecutors had made a reasonable decision in April when they found there was not enough evidence to indict Netanyahu.

"The court will not overturn an attorney general's decision unless it is deemed extremeunreasonable, they wrote.

The judges said their decision was not a complete exoneration of the prime minister and Justice Minister Tsahi Hanegbi, also implicated in the matter.

The affair created the most serious scandal of Netanyahu's year-old government, prompting some Israelis to demonstrate for an official inquiry and others to call for the prime minister's resignation. A Supreme Court move to charge Netanyahu could have brought down the government, though, technically, he could have remained in office until convicted

The decision was hailed as a vindication by Netanyahu, who has maintained his innocence in the affair since it broke in January.

Comic book featuring first appearance of Batman fetches $68,500

NEW YORK - Holy Batbucks!

A May 1939 comic book featuring the firstever appearance of Batman netted $68,500 at auction Saturday.

Detective Comics No. 27, considered the finest unrestored copy ever offered for public sale, brought the highest price at a sale of comic art that totaled $1.7 million, Sotheby's spokesman Matthew Weigman said.

The Caped Crusader was not the only one drawing high prices: A copy of Action Comics No. 1, the 1938 comic book where Superman first appeared, sold for $46,000 to a private American collector.

The first comic devoted to the Man of Steel, Superman Comics No. 1, sold for $18,400.

"WE WANT TO MAKE A PLAYGROUND THAT IS ACCESSIBLE TO ANY CHILD."

Parks and Rec Department looks to develop playground for physically challenged youth

If you have any questions or wish to donate money to the playground fund-raising efforts, you can contact Terry you can contact Terry DeWeese or Richard Allen at the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department at 587-2757. RENE EICHEN

The Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department discussed the development of a playground for the physically challenged Wednesday.

"This playground will meet the needs for everyone and will enable a lot of kids to use the facilities, not just the physically challenged," Terry DeWeese, director of the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department, said. "We want to make a playground that's accessible for any child."

The Little Apple Pilot Club, a local women's service organization, first developed the idea for the playground. They pitched the idea to DeWeese last August.

The money donated from the club, combined with funds from the Parks and Recreation's park development fund, will set the stage for the initial fund-raising activities.

The playground, which will be built at the Frank Anneberg Park, will be constructed close to the lake area, near the largest shelter house. A fence will be built between it and the lake to make it safer for the children.

The new equipment will be easy for the physically challenged to use because it will be designed specifically with them in mind, DeWeese said.

Areas will be elevated where necessary, and the swings will be gliders that are low to the ground so the wheelchairs can roll up onto them, he said. The merry-go-round will also be low to the ground and will be set into the rubberized service so there is no open space below it.

Cement sidewalks, which are better to maneuver wheelchairs on, will be used instead of sand. Rubberized areas will be in place around fall zones, such as swings, monkey bars and parallel bars.

"The equipment will be at ground level to make it more accessible," said Richard Allen, park planner for Parks and Recreation. "There will be a transfer area where children can wheel up to it, slide themselves off their wheelchairs onto a slipper slide and slide back down to where their wheelchair is."

"Our playground will be less expensive." DeWeese said, "because it will be designed and constructed in-house. We are looking at spending $30,000 to $50,000 initially."

nitially."

DeWeese said later expansion is in mind for the playground.

"If it's not challenging for the kids, it's no fun for them," he said.
"It doesn't matter whether the child is in a wheelchair or not. They want to be challenged, and it has to be fun."

Allen said the materials used for the equipment will be made of a rugged, recycled plastic material that won't rust or heat up in the sun as much as metal does.

There won't be any wood used either, as wood will eventually splinter. Manufac-tured components, not volunteer or homemade equipment, will be used because of the risk factors involved. They will also save money by installing it themselves.

Allen, who is a landscape architect, and Jerry Dishman, park superintendent, will work on the design and, with the help of their crews, will put the playground components together.

"We'll order the equipment from the manufacturers and take it from there," DeWeese said. "We hope to have it completed by the end of 1998."

DeWeese said the meeting was intended to get input from interested community members on the initial design of the playground.

"Whenever we design or plan a playground, we invite everyone including kids — and let the kids tell us what they want," DeWeese said. "The kids will design it."

EMERGENCY

One place to go

Hospital emergency services in Manhattan are provided only at Mercy Health Center's College Avenue facility (the former St. Mary Hospital), located at 1823 College Avenue, just west of Bramlage Coliseum.

The emergency room at Mercy Health Center's Sunset Avenue facility (the former Memorial Hospital), has been permanently closed.

The consolidation of Emergency Services is a part of Mercy Health Center's continuing effort to provide the people of Manhattan and the region with the highest quality health care in the most efficient manner.

As always, in the event of a life-threatening emergency, call 911 for immediate assistance. When you do need to come to the emergency room, we'll be waiting for you, 24 hours a day, seven days a week in the Emergency Department at 1823 College Avenue.

McVeigh verdict, death sentence begin nation's healing process he trial of the most horrible act of terrorism in American history is over, and the punishment has been set.

Now it's time for the healing to begin.

For the millions of Americans who had lost faith in the judicial system, restoration has begun. The verdict can act as a unifying blow against terrorism and can help eliminate the distrust citizens have for the government.

But while the results of the trial have so much potential, there is the threat that they can do harm as well.

McVeigh cannot be treated as a martyr. By glorifying him, people glorify his actions and his cause.

Instead, it is more beneficial to remember the victims. We should care about the innocence that was lost, instead of dwelling on the hatred and cowardice that took them away. In addition, it's important to avoid the restriction of liberties.

While one shouldn't necessarily condone McVeigh's message, it is imperative to not let his actions be reason to keep his message, or anyone else's, from being heard

Not all people with radical points of view will take such drastic measures to be heard. In fact, most people rely on other measures such as voting and forming organized protests to make sure their voice is heard.

Separate his idea from his action. By doing so, one ensures that others have the opportunity to speak, no matter how radical or just their message is.

Overall, it is an issue of responsibility.

Americans should remember those whose lives were taken away, but shouldn't let American ideals change because of the actions of a coward.

Road work creates headaches, hassles and ponderances

It's summertime, and that means time for vacations, baseball, swimming pools, cookouts and all that other summer-fun stuff.

But summer is also time for something else orange barrels and road-closed signs. Summertime means construction, which I can say I understand. Generally, the weather is nicer now than it is in, say, January.

If I were a construction worker, I would much rather work outside during June and July than in January. A sunburn is most definitely better than frostbite.

But I hate construction.

"Left lane closed ahead" or "Be prepared to stop" — just a few of the phrases associated with road construction. And there definitely seems to be a lot of construction here in Manhattan right now.

First, why does all this construction have to occur

To me it would make more sense to group all the construction crews together. They could have one big construction-worker party. They could start on one side of Manhattan and work to the other side. That way

Second, why must the entrances onto Kansas Highway 113 (aka Seth Childs Road) heading north be closed?

Last week I was heading out of town, and I planned to take 113 north, but, wait a minute, the on-ramp from Kimball Avenue was closed.

To me it would make more sense to group all the construction crews together. They could have

They could have one big construction worker party. They could start on one side of Manhattan and work to the other side.

The on-ramp on Anderson Avenue was closed off also. I can understand the need to occasionally close off roads for repair, but all three of these access roads don't need to be closed at the same time.

There was not even a detour sign to point to another way. Fortunately, I was able to drive around some residential neighborhood and find another way to get onto the highway, but the fact that I had to was ridiculous.

These road crews need to put up a sign of some kind to let drivers know where they can get on the road.

Also, it seems as though the construction workers are not working very hard. I haven't noticed it this summer, but last summer while Kimball Avenue was being repaired, every time I drove by, there was no work being

The workers were just standing around smoking and talking with each other. Maybe this work could get done faster and save tax payers' money if everyone got to work.

Another thing I hate about construction is when there is a big sign that says one of the lanes is closing ahead. Most of the traffic is in the other lane, but a few drivers decide to stay in the lane that is closing and sneak up ahead.

Then someone, who is in the proper lane, goes ahead and lets the other driver in.

This slows up the traffic even more. If drivers stopped letting these people in, maybe the selfish driwers would learn a lesson.

When the orange sign on the side of the road says lane closed in 1500 feet, there is plenty of time to react and get over in the other lane. Drivers shouldn't wait until 10 feet before the lane ends.

And don't let people in, either. If you are a driver and are in the proper lane, you were probably patient enough to wait your turn.

When you have to stop and let these people in, all the vehicles behind you must slow down also. If you don't stop to let the other drivers in traffic will move at

And finally, while I am on the subject of construction, I must ask — why are the side streets here in Manhattan not getting fixed, and will they ever get fixed?

I think a few more signs are needed, and what is

I think a few more signs are needed, and what is with those big canyons that you must drive through in the intersections?

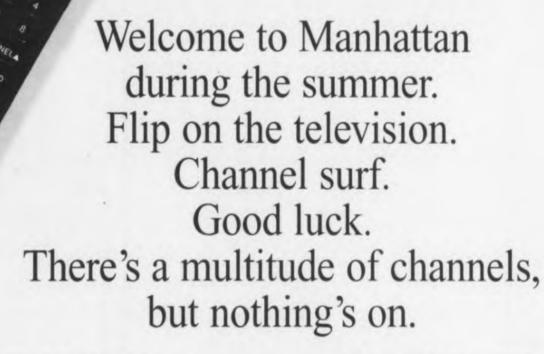

If you go faster than five miles per hour your car scrapes on the bottom.

recrapes on the bottom.

I don't understand this.

I don't understand this.

You would think in a town with such a great engineering school, someone could come up with a better system for intersections.

don't need television. Well, not that much, at any rate.

Now that the Stanley Cup playoffs are over, my viewing schedule is a mere fraction of what it was a week or two ago. Now it's back down to my three basic staples of existence: the unpredictable antics of "The Simpsons," the acid-laced deadpanning of "Daria" (yes, I know it's MTV; sue me) and the irreverent reporting of the Sunday night "SportsCenter" with Dan and Keith. And, of course, Headline News, whenever there's nothing else on.

Gentle summertime viewing, until football season starts.

Sigh.

After living with cable in Manhattan for several years, I couldn't see how anyone would be transfixed by a box with a tube hooked into it.

When you're dishing out somewhere around a buck per channel for redundant CBS affiliates, the all-powerful "UPN," and let's not forget the fur-filled frolic of Animal Planet, the power button becomes the most important remote control there is.

I recall a speech student's enthusiastic crusade to add Comedy Central to the lineup of cable stations available locally, merely because his favorite program ("Mystery Science Theater 3000," what else?) appeared on it. That was three years ago.

Now "MST3K" has left Comedy Central, and Manhattan now has F/X.

Was there a cry for F/X that I wasn't hearing? Was the blood of the cable-hungry flowing in the streets some night when I stayed home? Is Manhattan just populated by Rupert Murdock-wannabes who insist on being exposed to every Foxderived cable channel conceivable?

derived cable channel conceivable?

Who does the Fox News Channel think they're kidding? Does flashing non sequiturs just left of the anchor during news briefs (any shorter and they'd be news g-strings) somehow compensate for an utter vacuity and lack of depth? Despite whatever rumors are floating around, American attention spans are not that short yet, but if they're still pandered to in that way, don't look for any improvement.

Speaking of pandering, I suppose we're lucky to have MTV in Manhattan. This guarantees us plenty of commercials, interrupted occasionally by three videos a month repeated ad nauseum in saturation rotation.

Well it's not all that had There's always the apparing reality of "The Well, it's not all that bad. There's always the gripping reality of "The Well, to be fair, MTV's now spurned "M2." a channel now featuring all videos with some measure of variety ("All music, all the time — and this time, we really mean it!").

Pity that it'll be 2002 before
Manhattan ever sees it.

I've been able to visit rural households taking advantage of their mini-dishes and am astonished at the selection of movie channels available. Remember when there was just HBO? Now there are seven HBO channels; three east-coast channels (the same as the first two, but three hours later) and an east- and west-coast HBO "family" channel, featuring selections apparently fit for the little ones.

Granted, I guess "Twister" and "Mr. Mom" are improvements over HBO's usual Friday night fare, featuring spare-change production costs and three-digit cup sizes.

I guess there are a lot of things I don't understand about the cable system. I don't understand why our preferences don't affect what we get to see. I don't understand how justification can be found for some channels' existence ("The Golf Channel"? Oh, bite me). I don't understand how people can vegetate in front of a television tube during the most comfortable part of the summer.

Now shihh. It's time for "Daria."

Tiger Woods faces difficult course in U.S. Open

BETHESDA, Md. - The rough-laden Old Blue course took the golfing world's dream of a Grand Slam, chewed it up and spat it back out.

Welcome to the club, Tiger Woods. "The suffering's over," Woods said after his 19th-place finish Sunday at the U.S. Open. "This golf course beat me up."

The narrow fairways at the Congressional Country Club simply wouldn't let Woods play the same game he used in a record-setting rout at the Masters two months ago. The crowd-pleasing huge drives were few and far between. Woods couldn't just rear back and whack the ball for fear of the tall grass

"I didn't play that aggressive, because, physically, I didn't have the skills to do it this week," said Woods, whose tee shots landed in the fairway only five of 14 times Sunday. "I didn't press at all because I knew my game wasn't quite there. I wasn't hitting the ball as well as I would have liked to, so I couldn't attack. I had to play more conservative and hopefully make some putts."

But he didn't make the putts. Calling his short game horrible, Woods said he knew victory had slipped away when he 3-putted three times on the back nine during Saturday's third round.

"That hurt, because, at the time, I was even-par after 11," Woods said. "My speed was off. I just need to work on my mechanics and hopefully get a better feel."

Though he was nine strokes off the lead going into the final round, the incredible sea of fans that had followed Woods all week stuck by him again Sunday as he shot a 72 to finish at 6-over 286. After hitting an 8-iron to 2 feet at 17, Woods marched down the fairway to a standing ovation, smiling as though he were only two holes from

One hole earlier, the First Family had joined in the Tigermania, with Chelsea Clinton staring Woods down with foot-long Secret Service binoculars as he walked to the 16th green.

Chelsea and her father cheered as Woods made a 16-foot putt to birdie the hole. Woods, so used to tuning out the fan hysteria around him, never knew they were there until someone told him after the round.

"As anyone knows, when you have a job at hand, that's the main focus," he said.

When told Chelsea was cheering for him, Woods joked: "Really? That's the only putt I made all week."

More seriously, Woods unashamedly admitted he was put in his place by Congressional's Old

"It humbled me big time. It's going to humble you whether you want it to or not, because the demands of a U.S. Open are so tough and are so strenuous that you're going to get worn out."

Nevertheless, Woods has demonstrated his ability to adjust and adapt, so there's little doubt he'll be an even bigger threat at next year's Open. When asked which lessons he learned the past week, Woods gave a stern answer that rang like a thinly disguised warning to anyone ready to count

"I learned a lot," he said. "The details of it, I'm not going to explain because I think that's pri-

AWARD-WINNING TRADITION

Fritz wins national championship in decathalon

STORY BY SAM FELSENFELD radition has it that the decathlon champion is the greatest athlete.

Because of the nature of the event — 10 grueling events that test a multitude of athletic abilities in two days the validity of this argument is rarely questioned.

According to tradition, the greatest athlete in the country is from K-State.

Former Wildcat standout and current assistant track coach Steve Fritz won the decathlon Friday at track and field's USA Outdoor Championships in Indianapolis. Although he won the national title, guaranteeing a berth at the World Championships in August, Fritz wasn't completely pleased with his performance.

"Several things didn't go as well as they should have," he said. "But my training is not set up so that I'm at my best right now. It's set up so that I can be at my best in August."

He scored 8,604 points, 40 points off his personal best, but only 13 points shy of the top mark in the world so far this year. His personal best of 8,644 points, set when he took fourth place at the Olympics last year, would be tops in the world

Knowing this, he has confidence in his chances at the World Championships.

"I know all the guys I'll be competing against," Fritz said. "I don't think any of them are out of my reach." Fritz finished the first day of competition on Thursday, trailing the eventual second-place finisher, Chris Huffins, by 165 points. However, on Friday, he won the 110-meter hurdles and the discus throw, and took third in the pole vault and javelin. Following the javelin, he took the lead from Huffins. He entered the final event, the 1,500 meter run, clinging to The 1,500 meter was also the final event at the Olympics last year, and Fritz slipped out of third place - the bronze medal into fourth place. At the USA Outdoor Championships, he ran a time three seconds slower than his time at the Olympics and only managed seventh place for the event.

But this time, it was enough to hold his spot in the standings. He took first place and now looks at the World Championships.

The level of competition at the World Championships is the same as the Olympics — it's the best athletes in the world going head-to-head. A high finish could help ease the disappointment of the Olympics, although Fritz isn't too concerned with finishing on top.

"My goal is not necessarily to go out and win. It's to go out and do the best that I can," he said. "There's probably six or seven events I'll do better in.'

In addition to Fritz, several other Wildcats competed this weekend in Indianapolis.

Renetta Seiler took second in the hammer throw, Vanitta Kinard finished fourth in the triple jump and Kirsten Schultz took eighth place in the javelin.

Seiler and Kinard both qualified for the World University team, while Schultz will be an alternate. Kinard will be an

After championship win, Jordan remains best player in Bulls' line-up ell, the NBA finals are over. Michael Jordan's Bulls still have never lost game six in the NBA finals, or a championship, and they never will until Jordan decides to walk away from the hard-

To stop him from retiring, let's all get down on our knees, look to the sunny summer sky and beg our various god or gods to intervene and bring back Michael Jordan

It doesn't matter that the NBA has become a race for second place year after year. Jordan is classical music in motion, ice cream in the desert and Superman without a Jordan is everything that is right with the world. If Jordan was to retire after winning his fifth Championship in seven seasons, the Atlantic Ocean would dry up, the sun would implode and Bill Clinton would develop an honest streak. It just can't happen.

I've heard the arguments from those who would like to see Jordan retire. They say we could once again witness a substantial amount of competition take place in the NBA finals. Frankly, I don't care. I want to see Jordan make the best players in the world look like Pee Wee Herman trying to guard

Allow me to state the obvious - no one on this planet can guard Jordan one on one. Some of the things he did in this year's finals are illegal in 27 states, including Utah.

In game one, Jordan lollygagged around the floor, waiting to stick his long, twisted dagger through the ribs of the Utah Jazz. With time running down in the fourth quarter, Jordan pulled up on Bryon Russell and simply drained the game winner as if the shot had the implications of a pick-up game in his driveway. The man is money.

Moments like that make Superman special. You don't see Charles Barkley, Patrick Ewing or Grant Hill hitting clutch gamewinners. The Lakers' Shaquille O'Neal has only hit one game-winner in his entire basketball life. Until these gentlemen decide to start hitting these shots, you won't be seeing any rings on those fingers.

In the finals, Jordan dropped an average of 32.3 points per game against the hapless Jazz. For the playoffs he averaged 31.1 per game, which led all playoff participants. lordan has been the leading scorer in the NBA playoffs nine times. The man is just P-H-A-T. Why are you so good Mike?

How about Jordan's game five, fluinduced 38 points? With 25 seconds left, Jordan steps up and drains a three-pointer to clinch the game. The man was puking up to game time. He probably could not even see

Generally, when you wake up in the morning to the stench of your own regurgitation, you call in sick to work, lay in bed and pretend the rest of the planet does not exist. When Jordan gets sick, he simply skips a shootaround, shows up just before game time, pukes in the locker room toilet and dominates the second-best team in the NBA in front of the entire planet.

Game five effectively ended the Jazz's season. Game six was a farce from the outset. Why they even bothered playing it, I don't know. No team has ever taken Jordan's Bulls to game seven. Clyde Drexler couldn't do it with Portland, Barkley couldn't do it with Phoenix, Magic Johnson couldn't even get to a game six, and we all know how the Supersonics fared in last year's finals.

This Jordan-led Bulls team is the best dynasty the game of basketball has ever

Had Jordan not taken a year and a half sabbatical to play a little baseball, this year's title would have been the seventh consecutive championship.

The Rockets could not have hoped to play with Jordan in the man's prime. The great Celtics dynasty won nine in the 1960s, Magic's Lakers grabbed five in the '80s and Larry Bird's Celtics won three.

By the time some other team finally manages to grab an NBA title for themselves, Mr. Jordan will have already retired to a nice little island he bought upon retirement. Hawaii maybe? Thanks for the memories, Mike.

Individual football tickets go on sale

► More info? Contact the ticket office at 532-7606.

Single-game football tickets go on sale today for students who haven't bought tickets for the fall.

There are tickets available for all home games this season. KU tickets are the highest priced at $36. Tickets for games against Texas A & M, Colorado and Missouri are $31, and the price of tickets for non-conference opponents, Ohio University and Bowling Green, are $26. Single-game tickets for sale are in the section with chairs on the lawn in the north end zone.

These tickets were allotted to the opposing school's team and sold at K-State when not purchased at the other school.

'We give each opponent 4,000 tickets and any that aren't sold are returned to us, and we then sell them," Kent Brown, sports information director, said.

Since K-State's football program has been on the rise, tickets have become harder to come by ..

"Our season tickets are sold out, and for the first time there is a waiting list," Brown said.

K-State students had the chance to get season tickets during pre-enrollment this spring. The ticket office changed the way they sell tickets this year, making tickets available to seniors and juniors first. The remaining tickets could be purchased by sophomores and freshmen.

There are 9,600 tickets available for students, 400 of which automatically go to the band. The remaining 9,200 can be purchased by students.

There are 2,500 tickets available for new students, and we are taking orders right now," Brown said. "There is a good chance of these selling out because the new students want to get involved, and this is a good way for them to do

Graves says NCAA owes Kansas City an explanation on headquarters move

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The NCAA owes Kansas City-area leaders an explanation for its decision to move its headquarters, Gov. Bill Graves said.

"I thought we put an excellent package together," Graves said Friday at a news conference.

City, Mo., the two finalists among about 10 cities that made competitive bids nearly two years ago.

NCAA officials have said financial analysis showed the NCAA would save $53 million over 22 years by moving to Indianapolis.

That was $48 million more than the NCAA would save at a Crown Center location in Kansas City and $30 million more than if it stayed in Overland Park.

Members of the Kansas City retention committee have challenged the NCAA's figures and have offered to meet with NCAA officials to discuss them.

"I think it's certainly appropriate the leadership team in Kansas City continues to ask the NCAA for some specifics on why we were judged not to have been the No. 1 choice," Graves

"From everything I know, still have a great deal of faith that it was better than Indianapolis," he said.

Kansas City officials said they not only provided all of their information about the $30-million to $35-million package in writing, but they met the May 15 deadline prescribed by NCAA. The $50-million financial package put together by Indianapolis may include as much as $12 million in private pledges that still may be toward an oil tanker and a resort town. Explosives concealed inside fake golf clubs. A chainsaw. Leeches. A million dollars worth of diamonds. A deaf girl trapped in an elevator, and a madman bent on revenge.

You'll find all of these in "Speed 2: Cruise Control," which opened

The movie opens with Annie Porter (Sandra Bullock), the bus-driving heroine from the original "Speed," taking a driving test. Meanwhile, her new boyfriend, Alex Shaw (Jason Patric), a dare-devil SWAT cop, is on a high-speed motorcycle chase nearby.

Annie thinks Alex is a quiet bicycle traffic cop on Venice Beach, but she finds out what Alex really does for a living when his motorcycle chase ends on the same road where Annie has just pathetically failed her driving test by crashing into a police

They love each other, but, gee, the trust is broken now, and how in the heck will they ever get it back? It seems as though Alex has already booked a Caribbean cruise for them, and he just happens to have the tickets in his pocket. However, a disgruntled and very ill (mentally and physically) technical genius named Geiger (Willem

A hijacked ocean-liner heading Dafoe), once employed by the cruise the original "Speed," which is to say line (he designed the Seabourn's computer system), was fired after he developed copper poisoning from working on their computers for so many years.

Left terminally ill, he pops pills and takes baths with leeches. He plans to punish the cruise line by taking over the ship's controls using his laptop computers, stealing the fortune in jewels and then running the ship into an oil tanker.

You pretty much know how the movie is going to end, but it's the getting there that's so much fun. Dafoe is excellent as the villain who places live leeches on his chest and cackles insanely when the need arises. As Geiger, he wins the award for disgruntled employee of the week.

Patric took the part after Keanu Reeves turned down the starring role in the sequel.

He doesn't have the same fun oneliners as Reeves had, but, when the deaf girl falls in love with him, it's understandable.

He plays a sort of James Bondtype hero, and when he hangs precariously inches from the ship's 12 footlong propellers, audience members hold their breath. In another scene, he shoots a seaplane with a spear-gun and reels himself in.

Bullock plays the same Annie as in she's cute and perky, but her role is reduced to saying calmly, "No, no, no," whenever her boyfriend wants to play hero. She spends most of her time fussing and fidgeting and then practically disappears for the last half hour of the movie.

She is kidnapped by Geiger and taken for a ride on, first, a jet ski and, second, a seaplane while Alex is left to stop the ship from crashing into one object after another and then coming to her rescue.

One of the funniest moments in the movie, though, belongs to Bullock when she whips out a chainsaw and proceeds to effortlessly cut open a door to let trapped passengers out. Wow. What man wouldn't want a woman who could do that?

Was the movie believable? No, but action movies rarely are.

Think James Bond or "Mission: Impossible." Audience members were left to wonder, among other things, why the people in the ocean-side resort can't see this huge ship barreling down upon them until it's about-

Ultimate Fake Book Local band goes the distance for Auntie Mae's crowd

rocked for hours."

Eric Melin, drummer for Ultimate Fake Book, said he was surprised at the crowd at Auntie Mae's last Thursday night. Surprised, because it was so huge, but not complaining at all.

Melin and the other members of UFB (bassist Nick Colby, and guitarist/vocalist Bill McShane), repeated their thanks to all present for their show. For anyone who hasn't been to Auntie Mae's, it's not particularly conducive to music. Most of the room is in the basement, where the ceiling stretches a full seven feet above the floor, and the clack of dropped cue sticks can be heard just overhead. There isn't really a stage, either. Melin set his drum kit on a raised platform built into one corner, with McShane and shirts, spread out to the side. To about half the room, either of the latter two were obscured by a ceiling-support column. But the crowd was huge (at least 50 crammed into that basement, stacking shot glasses and pints) and UFB rocked for hours, with a 20-plus play list of songs. McShane seemed unsure whether they could make it as Melin threw the list together from their long repertoire. They all made it. Even with new originals like "Waste it All" and "Goddamn Dance Craze" that McShane told the crowd UFB had never been played live before. They had the crowd bouncing along with them. The critic Simon Frith wrote, "A song doesn't exist to convey the meaning of the words. Rather, the words exist to convey the meaning of the song." This is a good thing, because McShane's vocals were all over the place, almost unintelligible. When he set up for "Far, Far Away," a song McShane said he wrote about the new "Star Wars" movies, it was all the audience could do to remember that lyrics weren't the point, if they minded.

"The crowd was soulful tenor into falsetto in most of his vocals, sometimes in a breathy squeak in huge (at least 50 newer songs like "Before You Leave" and crammed into that "Liferaft Halo," making the audience basement, stacking shot glasses and pints) and UFB wonder how the frontman from Shudder To Think invaded the ranks of the Descendants. There were older KSDB-FM 91.9 favorites like "Wrestling Leap Year" and "All the New Poisons," too. Yes, we remember metal. But it was never this McShane likes to throw his thin but

UFB made the audience remember the Knack with "Good Girls Don't," and summoned the spirit of the Man Called Destruction with the Replacements' "Alex Chilton." I'm in love, what's that sound?

Colby's smug bass licks added extra color to McShane's prog-rock guitar and Melin's precise assault by drum kit. I guess when you go through the power chords this fast, you need more.

There's just enough longing at the end of each three-minute ditty to round them out without dragging on.

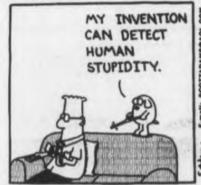

So if they're this good, where's the album, right? Melin, who joined UFB in November and may be remembered from the late Truck Stop Love, said there was supposedly a record label representative in the audience that night. He expects an album by late August, he said.

"It'll either be called 'This Will Be Laughing Week,' or Electric Kissing Parties," he said.

McShane, who assured me all his lyrics made sense, said he's happy with the way things are going. Recent booking problems made UFB feel somewhat cheated out of the opportunity to open for Soul Asylum and Guided By Voices, but it

"It'll just be some other band that gets to," he said. "It doesn't really matter. A lot of doors are opening for us lately."

Graphic testimony continues in 2nd day of mauling hearing

DETAILS OF AN ALLEGED ATTACK that killed 11-year-old set up 3rd day of preliminary hearing in Junction City.

JOHN HENDERSON

The preliminary hearing for two Milford residents accused of second-degree murder for the April mauling of an 11-year-old, outside their home began this week.

Witnesses testified Tuesday and Wednesday in Geary County District Court, in Junction City, that Jeffrey and Sabine Davidson owned three Rottweiler dogs trained for aggression.

Christopher Wilson was attacked by these dogs at a corner near his home in Milford, Kan., where he waited for the school bus around 7:30 a.m. on April 24, wit-

Geary County attorney Chris Biggs introduced 21 witnesses, adding he had 6 to 8 witnesses to go.

District Magistrate Judge Tom Ball presided. Sabine Davidson was represented by Ronald Hodgson, and Jeffrey Davidson was represented by David Orr.

David Morrison, deputy with the Geary County Sheriff's Department, testified he arrived at 7:43 a.m. the day of the attack in response to a 911 call relayed by the school bus driver to her supervisor.

Before this hearing began

Eleven-year-old Christopher Wilson was mauled to death by three Rottweiler dogs the morning of April 24, 1997, in the Geary County town of Milford after waiting at the school bus stop.

Wilson and his brother Terrell, 8, were waiting for the bus at 7:30 that morning when the dogs

When driver Kathy Roberge arrived, Terrell ran up to her bus and said Chris had some trouble with dogs. She called her supervisor, who dialed 911.

Jeffrey and Sabine Davidson, the alleged owners of the dogs, were arrested on probable cause of owning vicious animals and were held without Morrison said he saw all three dogs in a drainage ditch with what appeared to be a human body. After telling bus driver Kathy Roberge to stay in the bus, he drew his sidearm and began yelling at the dogs. "I figured if I yelled at the dogs, they would go away," he said. Biggs asked if the dogs went away. Morrison said no. "They weren't running," he said. "The largest of the three was male. When he got closer, I could see blood on its muzzle and blood on the front of its legs.

"It got about 15 to 20 feet away. That was too close

Morrison said he shot the male, Chance, killing him. The other two tried to run, he said. Deputy Sergeant Dennis Shumate testified later that one of the other dogs, Panda, was wounded, and he killed it as it tried to get back inside the fenced area behind the Davidson

The third dog, Jenny, escaped into the woods and was shot after it emerged later that day, Morrison said.

Jeffrey Davidson came to the door when he knocked. Shumate testified. Sabine followed soon after, just as Shumate told her husband he was to be put under arrest for allowing vicious animals at-large, a violation of

"At that point, she said, 'Why just arrest him? They're my dogs too." Shumate said. "At that time, I placed her under arrest.

Shumate led the Davidsons back inside their house so Jeffrey could make a phone call, he said. Neither were in cuffs. At that point, he noticed a dog carrier in the kitchen with a fourth Rottweiler inside. Dunja was barking and growling as it entered the room, making the carrier shuffle along the floor, he said.

Shumate, a 6-year veteran of the sheriff's department, was nervous. He requested that he and Sabine Davidson leave the kitchen. When she refused, they put her in handcuffs and made her leave the room, he said. Carolyn Stevens said she was waiting in her jeep behind the school bus as it sat idle during the attack. Her voice cracking with emotion, she said she watched the dogs on top of Chris Wilson.

'They were playing tug-of-war with him," she said. "They were just pulling, and wouldn't let go."

Beth Glimmer-Jones, detective lieutenant with the sheriff's department, took a number of pictures the state introduced into evidence, she said. The pictures were of the dogs, Wilson, his autopsy, the Davidson house and the area around it, she said.

She and Deputy Sergeant Sandy Popovich took a video of the eastern gate leading into the chainlink fence surrounding the Davidson's backyard, which was displayed to the court.

The east gate, she said, had a padlock but no chain, and the latch only closed halfway over the pole.

"I gave the gate a nudge, and it opened," she said. "Even with the lock on it, with a jolt, it popped right

INCOMING SENATE LEADERSHIP raises questions concerning Student Publications Inc.'s equipment fee.

BENJAMIN YODER

The Student Publications Equipment Fee, passed last February, has recently come under scrutiny by incoming Student Senate leadership.

Confusion has occurred because some senators thought the loan to purchase new equipment would last two years, and others believed it would last four years. Though the contract has not been signed yet, Senate decided to finance Student Publications Inc. initially for two years. In the fall, a proposal may be brought before Senate to amend the bill to include an additional two years of funding.

prepares groups

According to the bill distributed to Senate in first readings, the fee was to be reviewed in the 2001-2002 academic year when the financing of the proposal ended. At that time, the fee would be reduced to a level deemed appropriate by Senate.

The bill Senate passed stated that when the certificate of participation ends, the fee would be reduced. The actual length of the loan was not specified.

Jake Breeding, 1996-97 Senate privilege fee committee chairman, said a mistake occurred during the rewriting because the length of the loan was unclear in the version passed by Senate

"When I retyped it, there was a typo, and it was left out," he said.

Breeding said the bill was never amended in commit-"Privilege fee committee didn't change the bill between first and second readings. There shouldn't have been any changes," he said. Sean Tomb, 1996-97 member of privilege fee committee and arts and sciences senator, also said he did not recall the bill being changed during committee meetings.

"If the bill changed from first to second readings, either I don't remember it or someone changed it without telling anyone," he said.

Breeding said that although the the bill passed by Senate did not mention the length of the loan, the intention was for four years.

"I was very clear and very repetitive," he said.

The language and intent of the bill was changed sometime between first and second readings, and Student Publications should not receive less funding, Breeding

"Somewhere we made a mistake, and they shouldn't pay for it. The Senate leadership should correct the mistake," he said. Breeding said the legislation passed was not true to the intentions of the privilege fee committee. "The Board of Student Publications is the victim,"

Breeding said. "It was Student Senate's fault." However, Breeding said, according to legislative procedure, financing the bill for two years is the correct course of action now, although it might be unfair to Student Publications.

"I think it's the right thing to do. It's the best thing to do if you go by the rules," he said. "As far as Student Publications getting their money on time, it might not

Aaron Otto, incoming Senate privilege fee chair, agreed financing the loan for two years is the best option

Girl shot dead during stop for ice cream

LOS ANGELES - The day after Father's Day, on the way back from renewing their wedding vows in Las Vegas, Troy and Shirley Robertson pulled off the road because their 9year-old daughter, Amanda, wanted ice

The family, including Amanda's maternal grandparents, her 6-year-old sister and a 14year-old cousin, went into a McDonald's restaurant at the Barstow Exchange, a tourist mall built to look like a train station. Minutes later, Amanda was dead, shot in the head during a botched robbery on her parents' 10th wedding

It was a bullet from the gunman's weapon that struck Amanda. The gunman, who exchanged fire with an off-duty police officer whose identity was not disclosed, died later at TRENTON, N.J. - The man convicted of raping and killing 7-year-old Megan Kanka asked jurors Wednesday to spare his life, facing the panel minutes after the little girl's father calmly described her as a family peacemaker with a bubbly personality.

Jesse Timmendequas said he was sorry about what he did to Megan and prayed for Closing statements in the penalty phase of the case were yesterday. The jury is expected to get the case today.

Timmendequas, 36, was convicted May 30 of luring Megan into his home, across the street from hers, and sexually assaulting and strangling her in 1994.

The jury will decide whether he is sentenced to death or life in prison without parole for the crime, which led to state and federal laws to notify a community when a convicted sex offender moves in.

The resolution by the nation's largest Protestant denomination asks its 15million members to take action against Disney's "anti-Christian and anti-family direction.

The resolution, which passed with a show of hands of the more than 12,000 delegates, urges "every Southern Baptist to take the stewardship of their time, money and resources so seriously that they refrain from patronizing The Disney Co. and any of its related entities." The resolution is not binding on churches.

Many Southern Baptists object to Disney's policy of giving health benefits to same-sex partners of employees, "Gay Days" at theme parks and the release by Disney and its film subsidiaries that make movies such as "Pulp Fiction" and "Kids."

According to convention spokesman Herb Hollinger, the crowning blow was the revelation that Ellen Degeneres' character on the ABC sitcom "Ellen" was a lesbian. Disney owns ABC; the production company for "Ellen" is Walt Disney Television.

Responsible owners can help prevent most dog attacks

► Tips to prevent dog attacks

· A stray dog comes up to you, stand very still with your hands to your side and your feet together.

• If you are on the ground, lay on your side, curl up into a ball and place a fist over each ear.

· Do not make any noise. Be as quiet and still as possible.

· Avoid looking at the dog because it may percieve this as a challenge. If you do see a dog running loose, stare straight ahead

Responsible owners, city ordinances and personal safety measures can be powerful shields against a dog's "Responsible pet owners could prevent a lot of bites from occurring," Kathy Gaughan, clinical instructor at the College of Veterinary Medicine, said.

Although all breeds of dogs have the potential to bite, some breeds are more aggressive.

"Dog attacks may be a learned behavior the owner has instilled or part of predatory instinct," Gaughan said.

Despite the breed of the dog, owners can prevent some aggressive behaviors.

Spaying and neutering can help to decrease the number of attacks. Pets that are spayed and neutered at a younger age are usually less aggressive, she said. Dogs that have frequent human contact are also less likely to attack "Most animals involved in attacks are outside and don't have a lot of human contact. They aren't treated like part of the family," Gaughan said. Ultimately, the owners are responsible for their pet's

"The owner must maintain complete control of the animal. Anytime you don't have control you are violating the ordinance," John Yadon, Riley County animal control offi-

An animal can be declared dangerous by the court if it is proven to be a nuisance. The ruling is not limited to human attacks but can include attacks on other animals.

Although owners are held responsible for their pets by city ordinance, there are pro-active steps people can take to protect themselves.

Simply knowing the behavioral nature of dogs can serve as a defense.

Penned or Confined animals should be avoided by everyone except the owners.

"Resist the urge to pet animals in cars, trucks or pens. That is their territory, and they are defending it," Gaughan

Children should be taught not to run up to dogs, even if the child knows the dog. Before petting a dog on a leash, the child should ask the handler permission to pet the dog and whether the dog is friendly, she said.

"It's important that people educate their children. Children are naturally trusting of everyone and, therefore, are at risk," Gaughan said.

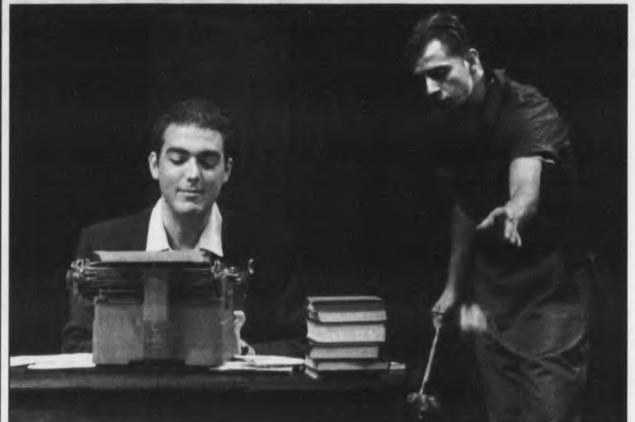

The library at the College of Veterinary Medicine has an instructional video available about animal safety called, "Dogs, Cats and Kids."

"Even adults can learn a lot from it," Gaughan said. Not all dogs can be avoided, though. When approached by a stray dog, remain calm.

"Dogs are more likely to bite when a person yells or screams," Gaughan said. "Screams get them more exited." If bitten by a dog, people should clean the wound immediately to prevent infection.

"If it's a very superficial wound, clean it really well. Run water over it for 10 to 15 minutes and clean it with mild soap," Gaughan said. Medical attention should be given to any bite or scratch that is deep, reddened, swollen, painful or drain-

Otto said contrary to the intentions, beliefs or agreements made during the fee process by privilege fee committee and Student Publications, Senate leadership had to go by the written legislation.

"All are subsidiary to what is actually passed on black and white in final action," he said.

Otto said the bill that privilege fee committee wrote was not passed by Senate, and the bill that Senate passed was not written by the committee.

"It was a mistake, and I was just afraid that if we signed something that was a four-year deal, we might have made another mistake on our part again, and two wrongs in this case wouldn't have made a right," he said. Otto said all the senators he talked to thought the loan was for two years. "The consistent theme was they didn't realize it was four years," he said.

Patrick Carney, 1996-97 Chairman of the Board of Student Publications and Senate parliamentarian, said there should have been no confusion about the length of the loan because Breeding e-mailed the minutes from the privilege fee committee meetings to every senator on the listsery.

"Every senator should have been aware that this was a four-year proposal. It was never amended on the floor, so any senator that is coming forward saying 'I thought that this was a twoyear proposal' was obviously not doing their basic homework," he said.

According to the minutes from the final privilege fee meeting, the loan was to be financed for four years at 4.95-percent interest paid in eight installments

Jeff Dougan, 1997-98 Senate Chairman and 1996-97 Academic Affairs Committee Chairman, said when he voted for the bill in February, he was under the impression the length of the loan was for two years.

"I remember voting for a two-year proposal," he said.

Dougan, whose signature is needed on the contracts, said he could not in good faith sign a four-year loan when the language of the bill passed by Senate reads for two years.

"We came to the consensus that we cannot violate what the bill says by signing a four-year contract," he said. Dougan said he had no real option except to interpret the bill as it reads. "I had to go by what the bill said," he said. "We had to come to a solution." Dougan said the contract needs to be resolved immediately because Student Publications is on a timetable for purchasing the equipment. "The contract had to be done now,"

Carney agreed that any further delay would harm Student Publications. He said equipment would cost more, revenue would be lost and interest rates would be higher if an agreement was not made.

However, Carney said Senate leadership has failed to compromise with Student Publications even though Student Publications did not make a mistake during the fee process.

"Student Senate never compromised. Regardless of what any one of them says, they never compromised," he said.

Carney said he felt Senate has done nothing to rectify the error it made.

"Student Senate screwed up. Student Publications gets to pay for it,'

Carney said when dealing with fees anything less than perfection is unacceptable, and the privilege fee commit-

"That error lies squarely with privilege fee committee and no short amount to its chairman, Jake Breeding," Carney said.

Ron Johnson, Director of Student Publications, said it was a mystery how the confusion occurred. "We've really received no explanation of why it happened," he said. Johnson said the proposal was to address two years of fees with four years of funding

"I really don't understand how the confusion could have been there," he Johnson said Student Publications was thankful for the funding.

"The two years of funding will be put to very good use," he said.

The fee process is far from perfect, Johnson said.

Carney agreed.

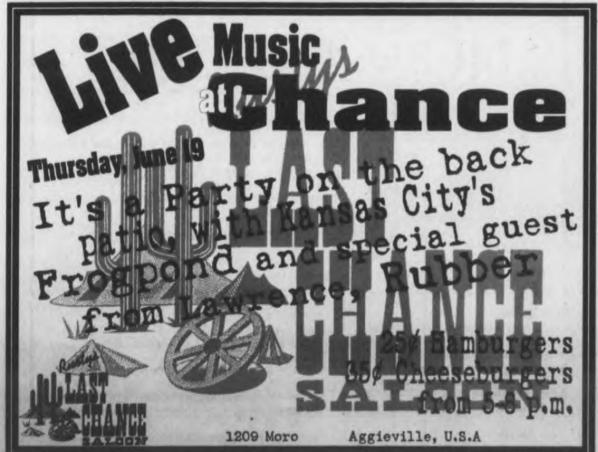

"Every group on this campus who is under the subject of review for privilege fees should be very concerned that this process is flawed at its very nature, that an error like this could go unnoticed by so many and so many at the center of power," Carney said.

He said this incident should diminish the amount of respect that Student Senate deserves.

A tale of privilege fees, mistakes, responsibilites and forewarning t's no secret on campus - Student Senate controls organizational fees. With about 60 senators controlling more than 50 percent of the student fee money next semester, perhaps it's time to tell a little story about a group called Student Publications Inc.

Last spring, a proposal came about to increase the equipment fee for Student Publications Inc. This fee, used to upgrade equipment, would involve state agencies, Student Senate and Student Publications Inc.

Debate ensued. Items were cut. A deal ironed out.

All in plain view.

After the first reading, the privilege fee committee met to rewrite portions of the legislation to eliminate various upgrades and establish a four-year plan for financing.

All sounded normal.

The legislation made its way back to the senate floor for second readings.

A little more debate occurred, yet the legislation passed.

Then problems developed as the one senate left, and a new senate entered.

Strangely, poorly written legislation made a four-year finance plan become a two-year finance plan. Details were changed and Student Publications Inc. faced a reduced budget and contract deadlines.

End result: Student Publications Inc. is dealing with half of the approved funding and senators are pointing fingers at one another. This little story plays into the upcoming semester nicely.

Groups, such as Lafene Health Center, will be coming to senate for funding requests. Lafene will be asking for about 35 percent of the fees to be allocated next semester.

Groups will trust elected individuals to make sure agreements are reached and possible funding increases made.

In most cases, groups will have no reasons to worry. However, they should be watchful. In the heat of debate, mistakes can be made. Costly mistakes.

It's all in the way the legislation is written. Now would be a great time to talk about holding senate responsible for mistakes. But with deadlines approaching, time is better spent working out a game plan for how to make due with the mistakes. A question could be raised, such as how an entire senate body could become confused when discussing legislation and unsure of the final details of that legislation.

Questions could be asked, and blame could be placed. The problem is, those who worked the original legislation are no longer in places of power. Instead, it's a new senate and a new president working with old mistakes they might not have been a part of before.

So instead, if your organization is coming up for funding, here are two bits of advice: Read the legislation thoroughly, and don't trust anything until it is signed, sealed and delivered.

A final suggestion for the new president: Tim, keep Senate in line. Hold them to their agreements. Maybe, just maybe, it's your job to make sure they don't leave any loose ends the next Senate will have to deal with in the following year.

I've never been to your parents house, but I bet I can tell you what is in their cupboard. I'll bet my last financial aid check somewhere in those cupboards is a "Better Homes and Gardens New Cook Book" - the hardbound spiral edition, I would hope.

I love this cookbook. It makes me feel like a real grown-up. My mother has one, her mother has one, her mother's mother has one.

As soon as my boyfriend and I bought the cookbook together, we knew this was a permanent relationship. You can have a house and all the stuff that goes in it, but until you have a Better Homes and Gardens New Cook Book. it just isn't a home.

We had to buy one because my mother won't give up her's and his mother won't either.

Go home and ask your mom to give you her Better Homes and Gardens New Cook Book

There is no way she's giving that sucker up. She probably got it when she got married. Or she and your dad

After years of making everything from French toast to Thanksgiving dinner from it, someday when your child asks you for it, you won't give it up either.

Every person I know has a story to tell from their childhood involving cooking with the help of Better Homes and Gardens. I asked. One of my favorites is a friend whose family's cookbook was accidentally set on a hot burner and now has that distinctive spiral pattern burnt

The cookbook has changed since your grandmother's days. There is now a chart of microwave hints. The recipes now list the nutritional facts of the meal and there are lots of low-fat recipes. A far cry from the fried chicken made with the skin on and fried in lard.

Much of the book is still the same though. There are lots of yummy-looking pictures of meals I'm pretty sure I can't make, like hard candies and that rib thingy that looks like a crown.

One of my favorite parts of the book is inside the back cover - the emergency substitutions. I am convinced this is a hold over from a time before convenience stores.

There is nothing on this page I couldn't get 24 hours a day from the Kwik Shop down the street, thereby avoiding any such emergencies. But I guess it is useful to know that in a pinch you could substitute a teaspoon of lemon juice for 1/2 teaspoon vinegar.

There is an interesting little section in the beginning of the book that gives a brief history of the cookbook. I usually don't buy into the public relations propaganda put into most books, but this time I made an exception. "To date, more than 30 million copies of the New Cook Book have been sold. It has become as much a staple in American kitchens as a sack of flour or a dozen eggs, with every dog-eared and food-stained page confirming its role in the family."

I can't argue with that and neither can you or your his grace that we may achieve what only he can achieve through us. Basically, we must give up. On our own, we can not be perfect. Galatians 3:11,13b shows us how we may obtain this wonderful

TAXING GTAS' WAGES UNFAIR TO STUDENTS, UNIVERSITIES

Last week in Washington D.C., the House Ways and Means Committee, chaired by Bill Archer (R-TX), in preparation for the FY 1998 budget, voted along party lines to eliminate Section 117(D) of the Internal Revenue Code.

The climination of this provision means graduate employee tuition waivers will now be considered taxable income by the Internal Revenue Service. In effect, the Ways and Means Committee has voted to cut the real wages of every graduate employee in the United States.

This tax increase/wage cut comes at a time when nationally, graduate research assistants contribute vital research to universities. Also, a full 45 percent of all undergraduate classes are taught by graduate teaching assistants. This flagrant attack on education can and must be stopped. In the short term, students, faculty and administrators should contact their members of Congress and the White House and voice their opposition to the elimination of Section 117(D) of the Internal Revenue Code before this provision is included in the final FY1998 budget resolution.

In the long term, the K-State community and universities across the country should support graduate employee unionization. GTAs and GRAs are workers who provide essential teaching and research to

A national rank and file graduate employee union is needed to protect GTA and GRA wages and work conditions so we can get on with the real business of the University - academic excellence, intellectual freedom and democracy.

College of Agriculture looks at ways to increase minority involvement

Since January, the College of Agriculture has been exploring new recruiting methods in an attempt to attract minority students.

Kristina Boone, assistant professor of agricultural journalism, said the College of Agriculture is very good at recruiting from its traditional base, which includes students from rural areas who have strong FFA, 4-H or agriculture backgrounds. However, there are other groups that haven't been targeted as much, she said.

'We're really trying to look at people that we haven't traditionally recruited. In a lot of ways, it's minorities. It's urban students and people who are the first generation in their family that's going to college. It's a larger effort than just minorities, although we just tend to think of it as a minority-recruitment effort," Boone said.

People do not realize all of the different opportunities available in agriculture, or that it's not just about production agriculture, she said.

"Less than 2 percent of people in the United States are employed directly in production agriculture these days, and yet agriculture is one of the largest industries in the United States, simply because so many people are involved in the industry outside of the farm. The farm and ranch are the backbone of the ag industry, but there are other jobs show people what agriculture is and all the things they can study, work and do in the field," she said. "One of the key selling points is there are so many jobs available to our students. We actually have a deficit of graduates for the number of jobs that are open in entry level agriculture.

Jackie McClaskey, assistant director of agricultural academic programs,

"I think it's safe to say we are targeting minorities, although we are not necessarily doing anything more for minority students than we are doing for everyone that we visit with. The main reason we are looking for some special programming for minority students is employers that they want more minorities and women graduating from our school to fill some of the employment needs they have," McClaskey said.

The idea grew out of discussions among various faculty members and agricultural student ambassadors about what could be done to increase the minority numbers in the College of Agriculture.

'We see the number of women continuing to increase every year, but the number of minority students we have in the College of Agriculture remains incredibly small," McClaskey said.

Current statistics show minorities make up less than 5 percent of the total College of Agriculture student body.

Women make up only 33 percent.

"We are trying to diversify the student body within the College of Agriculture, because that's what employers need. Employers need students that are more diverse not only in their race, but also in their interests and where they come from," McClaskey said. "The more we can do to diversify the College of Agriculture, the better we are going to prepare all of our students."

In order to achieve more diverse recruits, the faculty is planning on targeting four schools that have high minority populations. One of these is Kansas City East in Missouri, which is a magnet school for agribusiness and natural resources.

"We are picking specific schools to schools where we feel the College of Agriculture can be successful," McClaskey said. "When we go into those schools, the program is open to everybody, whether they are male, female, or whatever race or creed. It does not make any difference to us, but we are going into schools that have a higher minority populations."

K-State has begun active recruiting with one school, and the other schools are at different points of the process, she

King's newfound batting method leads to a 13-game hitting streak

KANSAS CITY, MO. - Just moving his hands two inches farther away from his body has helped Jeff King go on one of the best tears of his life.

King hit a first-inning grand slam Wednesday night, powering Kansas City past Houston 6-2 and making him 10-for-21 with four home runs and 12 RBIs in six interleague games with Pittsburgh and the Astros.

During his 13-game hitting streak, the former Pirates player has five doubles, six homers, 13 runs and 15

"Hitting's a funny thing," said King. "Sometimes the ball looks big and bright. Other times, it looks small and blurry. The ball just looks a lot bigger than it did a couple of weeks ago."

A couple of weeks ago, King, at the suggestion of hitting coach Greg Luzinski and manager Bob Boone, moved his hands. All at once, the slump that plunged his average as low as .214 vanished.

"We finally hit on a spot," said Boone. "We moved his hands away from his body just a little. About two inches. And that's what it took Houston's Luis Gonzalez singled in the second inning, extending his hitting streak to 22 games, one short of Art Howe's 16-year-old club record. Gonzalez's streak is the longest in the NL this season.

"I don't pay much attention to it," Gonzalez said. "I'd rather trade it for a six- or seven-game winning

The Royals turned three double plays to back Jim Pittsley (2-4), who picked up his second win in three starts. The 6-foot-7 right-hander allowed two runs and eight hits in a career-high eight innings. He walked none and struck out four.

"He must have pitched better tonight than he has all year," said Houston manager Larry Dierker. "We have guys who draw walks, but we couldn't get any tonight."

Jose Offerman singled to open the Kansas City first against Donne Wall (2-4), Tom Goodwin singled and Jay Bell walked.

King, 6-for-12 with seven RBIs in the three-game series against the Astros, sent a 2-1 pitch into the leftfield bleachers for his seventh career grand slam.

"There's nothing like starting a game with a grand slam," Boone said.

Chili Davis then doubled as the first five Royals reached safely against Wall. But after that, Goodwin's one-out single in the second was the Royals' only hit against the right-hander until Jermaine Dye singled with one out in the sixth.

Dye went to second on an infield out and made it 5-I on Mike Macfarlane's RBI single. The Royals loaded the bases again in the seventh, and King scored on Blas Minor's wild pitch. Craig Biggio singled in the Houston sixth and eventually scored on Jeff Bagwell's grounder. Biggio added a sacrifice fly in the eighth.

Former football player arrested for DUI

JESS C. LOUK

Former K-State Football player Ray Eagle was arrested for DUI at the intersection of Classin Road and Denison Ave. at 2:07 a.m. Friday, Lt. Buddy Mays, Riley County Police Department, said.

After what Mays said was a routine traffic stop for speeding, Eagle was given a field test to determine if he had been drinking.

Following the field test, Eagle was taken to the Riley County Jail where a breathalyzer test was administered. After allegedly failing the breathalyzer, Eagle was arrested for DUI, Mays said.

Arraignment is set to take place at 8:15 a.m. today at the municipal court building. Eagle said he has retained Troy Huser as his attorney. Huser's office declined to comment on the case. Eagle has no previous convictions on record in the city of Manhattan or Riley County records.

After two years of playing football for Garden City Community College, where he earned all-American honors, Eagle transferred to K-State. Eagle received varsity letters for the 1994 and 1995 seasons and was a starter at defensive for the Holiday Bowl team that beat Colorado State, 54-21, in 1995.

Even though Eagle hasn't graduated, he is no longer affiliated with the team. After attending classes in spring 1997, Eagle did not pre-enroll for classes for the fall semester. Eagle's major was wildlife manage-

Football camp focuses on technique and fun

On June 15, nearly 500 athletes arrived at K-State for five days of drills, films, fundamentals and techniques. These athletes are here for Coach Bill Snyder's summer football camp.

The camp, which is open to boys ages 12-18, is a football camp of "My high school coach told me this was a great place to learn skills and techniques, yet still have fun. And he was right," Jason Beckstrom, a 16-year-old from Tulsa, Okla., said. Greg Peterson, receivers coach and passing game coordinator for the Wildcats, also helps to coordinate the camp.

"We're not as much of a contact and competition-oriented camp as we are a fundamental and teaching camp," Peterson said.

The campers begin each day at 9 a.m., and practices are divided into three sessions that last a little more than two hours each, with breaks for lunch and dinner.

guest coaches from high schools around the region teach the campers techniques, drills, and fundamentals to help them become successful in the future. "We teach these young players just like we teach the players on our football team," Peterson said. "We try to give them a PMA, or positive mental attitude." The camp takes place at Brandeberry Indoor Complex and Wagner Field. The coaches divide the campers by age and position, and all players get an equal chance to play at both facilities "We try to work with individuals on techniques and drills that they can take with them to work on in the future," Peterson said. T.J. McDaniel, Topeka, is attending his third camp. He said it gets better every year. "When I was younger I came to learn," he said, "but now I come not only to learn but to get an edge and hopefully be seen by the coaches. I'd love to play for K-State someday."

In addition to on-field activities, there are many other things stressed during the camp.

"Not only do we teach football, we also stress academics and ways to be successful," Peterson said. "Not only on the field, but off it as

The campers also spend time in the weight room to learn strength techniques and conditioning drills, and in the film room to learn proper ways to study and use game tapes.

"It's been a good week," Tyson Schwieger, coach, said. "I remember the first time I came in 1991. There were 50 campers. Now there

This year the camp costs $199 for a resident fee that includes housing, meals and five days of camp. There is also a $110 charge for a commuter-fee option, which includes everything but housing.

"I'm very impressed with the coaches here," said Tim Sloup, a 17year-old lineman from St. Pius X High School in Missouri. "I've learned a lot of drills and techniques that will help me next year.

"K-State has had a good program the last five years, and I thought this would be one of the best places to come," Sloup said. "The coaches want the players to learn. If I wasn't too old, I'd come back Dreams began Monday.

Whatever the dream, 100 basketball careers were taking that first step down the

K-State women's basketball program offered Deb Patterson's Kansas State Basketball Camp

The camp, which started Monday, is for girls in third through 12th grades, teaching fundamentals, addressing attitudes and stressing academics.

"The idea is to give young girls an opportunity to play the game," Deb Patterson, K-State women's basketball

"There is only so much they can learn playing in their driveway," Patterson said.

Patterson said giving girls a chance to play a five-on-five, 94-foot-court game is vital to their development as basketball

"It's a great opportunity to get some quality instruction," Patterson said.

High school coaches from around the state, including Mike Goehring from Topeka West and Jon Holliday from Holton. are helping with the camp.

Goehring said fundamentals were important, but other things needed to be learned as well.

"They need a feel for the game," Goehring said. "We instruct them in team concepts. Brit Jacobson, a senior guard for the Wildcats, said she liked to teach basketball to the players of the future. "We teach them the basics, like dribbling," Jacobson said. "But we also emphasize attitude."

Jacobson said the girls needed to gain an attitude about the game

"Basketball is fun," she said. "There is a competitive drive, an attitude they can use in other areas of life."

But, as Patterson said, academics overshadow the first two

"We have an NCAA compliance person here that talks to the girls," Patterson said. We want the young girls to understand that education comes first.'

Patterson said it is also important to instruct the girls in teamwork, team play and

It's only a matter of time until Griffey sets new home-run slugging record your e-mail comments to Matt at (mattspu@ksu.edu).

Records are made to be broken. In 1961, Roger Maris, with Mickey Mantle hitting behind him, cracked Babe Ruth's 34-year-old record of 60 home runs

This year, the Mariners' Ken Griffey Jr. could be the one to break Maris' 36-year-

As it stands now, he's on pace to beat this mark. If anybody can do it, Griffey can.

He will be able to handle all the media pressure that will undoubtedly surround his run at 62. His dad, Ken Sr., was a member of the Big Red Machine in the 1970s. Griffey has always known the spotlight and what it can be like in a major league club-

As a 17-year-old, Griffey, just out of high school, was the first overall pick in the major league draft. At age 19, he earned himself a spot as the starting centerfielder on a major-league baseball team. Ever since then, Griffey has been the star.

Even though he has a major-league leading 27 home runs, his coaches told Baseball Weekly that he still hasn't found his groove. If you think he's lit up the first half, just wait until after the break.

When Griffey breaks this record, there will always be people excusing his accomplishments as a result of expansion and a thin pitching pool. Those of you who will make excuses are wrong.

Records are made to be broken. The game has evolved. Hitters are better. They are bigger and stronger.

I don't know if Griffey could get the better of a Nolan Ryan in his prime or a Bob Feller, but they would be great battles to

Since the days of Ruth and Maris, the game has changed. There weren't many relief pitchers back then. There weren't guys who got paid big bucks to come in and pitch one inning. There weren't five-man pitching rotations. The guys back then pitched more innings on fewer days rest. They threw more pitches, and, by the end of game, the pitches weren't as tough as they

There are people who argue that Maris hit his 61 home runs in a longer season, and, therefore, he did not break the same record. Hence, the asterisk that used to be in the record books indicating Maris accomplished his feat in a longer season.

If we play by this rule, maybe there should be asterisks in the record book indicating Griffey led the American League with 40 home runs in the strike-shortened 1994

Nonetheless, there will always be those who feel an asterisk should be put next to the name of any player who breaks a record. What will it be now? Maybe interleague play affected the stats for this season.

Baseball has a hall of fame and record books to remember the great players of the past. Great feats accomplished by players like Maris and Ruth will not be forgotten. Fans will realize that the game has changed. Maybe for the better, maybe for the worse.

But records are made to be broken. Griffey is one of the best players of this era. Someday someone will surpass Griffey and hit 70 home runs.

As the game evolves, all players will have to step up to the next level in order to make it to the big leagues, and records will continue to be broken.

Griffey deserves to be the one to break the record. He has been a model player since breaking into the majors in 1989, and he has been very popular with the fans.

Since 1990, he has finished no lower than third in the all-Star balloting. Currently, Griffey is leading all players in fan All-Star balloting again. He doesn't clash with the media, and he does not show his gratitude to the fans by telling them they are No. 1 one with his middle finger. The fans love him, he loves the fans and he loves the game.

Ken, I hope you break this record, and I wish you the best of luck.

Click, flash, click, flash. The audience laughed. The crowd waited eagerly to be amused for the evening.

The first act was "The Actor's Nightmare." Paige Smith, junior in theater, played the main part of George Spelvin, an actor who couldn't control a performer's worst dream.

"The Actor's Nightmare" had a free-flowing structure, which proved to be very humor-

Nhek Bunchhay has been the government's chief negotiator with the Khmer Rouge. However, his reports have occasionally fallen through or appeared distorted for partisan political advantage.

Last week, Pol Pot reportedly fled his northern stronghold of Anlong Veng with a small band of loyalists after ordering the killing of Son Sen, his onetime defense minister. In a brutal display, some of Pol Pot's forces ran over Son Sen's family with a tractor.

Nhek Bunchhay flew to Anlong Veng Wednesday to cement the defection of about 1,000 guerrillas who had been held up there with Pol Pot since the Khmer Rouge began disintegrating last

"This evening, Pol Pot surrendered with 15 people" in Anlong Veng, Nhek Bunchhay told the Associated Press. 'The Khmer Rouge says Pol Pot will be kept for an international tribunal."

Nhek Bunchhay indicated that Pol Pot may have been forced to give up because he had run out of food and medicine for unspecified ailments. The general said Pol Pot's wife also had surrendered with him.

A broadcast by the clandestine Khmer Rouge radio Wednesday claimed the 69-year-old Pol Pot had confessed. It was not immediately clear what he confessed to, but the broadcast implied Pol Pot was in the hands of the fighters who had turned against him.

Pakistani faces charges in CIA slayings

After four years of evading an international manhunt, a somber, bearded Mir Aimal Kansi appeared in court Wednesday to face charges he gunned down two CIA employees outside the spy agency's headquarters.

Kansi was arrested last weekend with the secret help of Afghan citizens and the government of his native Pakistan. He faces the death penalty if convicted for the rush-hour slayings outside CIA headquarters that stunned the nation's spy service.

Kansi, wearing a green prison suit, sneakers and a red identification wristband, appeared in a two-minute court session Wednesday morning and told Judge J. Howe Brown that he understood the charges against him but could not afford an attorney. Brown ordered that counsel be appointed and set a court date of June 27.

"Do you have a lawyer?" Brown asked. "No, I don't," Kansi said. "I don't have money to pay the lawyers, sir." President Clinton said the case underscores the nation's determination to pursue terrorists no matter how long it takes, no matter where they hide. White House spokesman Mike McCurry said Clinton approved the plan to arrest Kansi and followed its execution along the way.

A diplomatic official, who spoke Wednesday on condition of anonymity, said Pakistan insisted that its involvement in bringing about the arrest be kept secret out of fear of angering the country's Muslim population and Islamic governments hostile to the United States, such as Iran.

Brown said Kansi faces 10 charges, five for the two murders and three woundings, five more for illegal use of a weapon in those assaults. He granted prosecutor Robert F. Horan Jr.'s request that Kansi be held without bond because of the seriousness of the charges and because he fled the country the day after the crime. "At this juncture, I'm going to ask for the death penalty," Horan said after the hearing.

Reporters glimpsed Kansi as Fairfax County authorities escorted the shackled suspect Tuesday night from a helicopter to the county criminal justice building. It was the final leg in a journey that brought Kansi, 33, from hiding in Central Asia to his arraignment in Fairfax, a Washington suburb.

One of the FBI's 10 Most Wanted Fugitives, Kansi fled the United States after the Jan. 25, 1993, shootings on a busy boulevard in which a gunman, using a Chinese-made AK-47 assault rifle shot at people in cars waiting to turn into the CIA's Langley, Va., headquarters during the morning rush hour. The attack turned a routine morning commute into mayhem.

CIA employees Lansing H. Bennett, 66, an analyst, and Frank Darling, 28, a communications engineer, were killed. Two other CIA employees and a telephone company employee working on contract at the CIA were Within weeks, authorities focused on Kansi. The break came when his roommate, also Pakistani, allowed police to search his apartment, where they found an AK-47 assault rifle that matched bullets fired in the slayings.

In February 1993, a Fairfax County grand jury indicted Kansi for capital murder, because more than one person was killed. In Virginia, executions are by lethal injection unless the condemned requests electro-

"Ever since then, the question has been whether or not we could find the man who was indicted," Horan said Tuesday night.

While authorities appeared uncertain about the motive in the shootings, they remained convinced that it was the act of a lone gunman, not in connection with any terrorist group.

One classmate of Kansi interviewed in the months following the slayings described Kansi as psychologically disturbed, possibly due to the death of his mother.

A number of failed attempts preceded Kansi's capture. But the FBI has maintained a constant presence in Pakistan seeking leads in the case with the help of Pakistani authorities. FBI officials refused to discuss which countries helped in Kansi's apprehension or whether any country or individuals were paid the $2 million reward the State Department posted for information about the accused.

Officially, U.S. officials said only that Kansi has been delivered abroad by Afghan officials to the custody of United States authorities.

"Why Wednesday are we on a high state of alert? Because Kansi was taken out,"said Ikram Sehgal, managing director of Security and Management Services, Pakistan's largest private security firm.

A senior U.S. official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Pakistan was instrumental in the arrest along the Afghan-Pakistani border.

One reason U.S. officials refused to publicly disclose Pakistan's involvement may be because of the political sensitivity in Pakistan of handing over a Pakistani to U.S. authorities. In some sectors of Pakistan, particularly where the Kansi tribe is prominent, Kansi is consid-

Afghanistan's Taliban rulers said Wednesday they had no part in delivering Kansi to U.S. officials.

Among the possible motives investigators have considered are avenging the death of a relative of the same last name whose assassination Kansi may have attributed to the CIA; or that Kansi was upset with the plight of the Bosnian Muslims and considered the killings a political statement

At the time of the murders, Kansi lived in Reston, Va., and worked for a courier service.

Congo achieves a moment of peace

REPUBLIC OF CONGO - Brazzaville residents took advantage of a lull in fighting Wednesday to prepare to flee the capital, while a U.N. envoy tried to avert renewed violence.

For the first time in days, residents heard no gunshots or mortar explosions, thanks to a three-day cease-fire that began at midnight Tuesday. Children returned to the streets to play, while their parents hurriedly packed their belongings to be ready when the ceasefire expires.

U.N. envoy Mohamed Sahnoun, hoping to broker a lasting peace, held separate talks in Brazzaville with the leaders of the two factions struggling for power - President Pascal Lissouba and former dictator Gen. Denis Sassou-Nguesso.

Signs were not encouraging. Lissouba emerged from his meeting with Sahnoun saying his government had sole power over Brazzaville's airport, even though the truce stipulates it is to be monitored by both government soldiers and Sassou-Nguesso's fighters.

"We have on the one hand this young democracy which wants to live," Lissouba said. "On the other side, I do

Glimmer-Jones said her dogs, one a 72-pound bulldog and one a 70-pound Labrador, could open the gate. She estimated Chance weighed 80 to 100

She had a photograph of what she said was the tree in Tony VanBuren's yard south of the bus stop where Wilson and his brother had climbed to escape the dogs. She also showed a photograph of the drag line leading 72 feet from the tree to the ditch where Wilson's body was recovered, she said.

Along the drag line, Wilson's flannel overshirt was found turned inside out, and his blood-soaked Dallas Cowboys Tshirt was found in pieces next to his body, she said. His shoes had been pulled off along with one sock, she said.

Erik Mitchell, a forensic pathologist, testified he performed Wilson's autopsy and found two fatal wounds. Using Glimmer-Jones's photographs, he said Wilson's right carotid artery had been cut, and his neck was broken by the dogs. Bridget Bernardi testified she sold Dunja, Chance, then Panda to the Davidsons. She said she modified the standard contract she'd used in her 10 years as a dog breeder and trainer after Sabine Davidson wanted to buy Chance.

Bernardi said she was concerned after seeing Dunja off her leash in the Davidson's yard and chewed Sabine Davidson out.

"I wanted to be able to get the dog back if I felt he was not safely being taken care of," she said.

She said she nearly took Chance back after seeing him later without a leash. Later while at the Davidsons', Sabine showed her Jenny, who Sabine had said she would be bringing back from Germany. Bernardi said she thought the dog was a puppy.

"I came to her house, and lo and behold, there was a 14-month-old adult," she said. "A dog that is not raised from puppyhood in one home is generally not safe in another household."

Jenny seemed all right to Bernardi, she said. Then Sabine Davidson showed her Jenny's pedigree.

"I said, 'Oh no,'" she said. She recited three German names of dogs in Jenny's bloodline.

'They're known to be very hard, very unstable," she said. "They were military dog bloodlines.

Biggs showed Bernardi a picture of a knotted cotton rope, and she testified she saw Davidson using it in play with the dogs, possibly with bite training. Bernardi said she wouldn't recommend a cotton rope, that burlap was better. Biggs asked why.

"It's more like human clothes than burlap," she said. "It's like if you teach a dog to bite only leather, eventually it only wants to bite leather.'

Carlos Roman, an investigator with the sheriff's department, said he found on a search warrant several magazines and videotapes describing dog training in the Davidson's home, in particular a type known as Schutzhund (SchH.)

Roman, who owns Rottweilers and is familiar with SchH, read a portion of one magazine before the court.

"Schutzhund training is extremely complex," he read. "If the foundation is not 100-percent correct, it's only a matter of time before animal and handler run into problems."

Tom Brennaman, K-9 supervisor with Seward County, from Liberal, backed up Bernardi's story. He had made a tape with Dunja to determine what sort of training she'd received.

He explained that Schutzhund, literally "protection dog," is a sport for training dogs. SchH is difficult, and dogs should be kenneled separately from other dogs, he said.

"You want to establish a working relationship between the dog and the pack leader, which is human," he said. "You do not want the dogs to pack with themselves, or they become untrainable."

SchH is designed to be fun, he said, but with improper training or lack of knowledge in the trainer, it can be dangerous. Running along the fence and barking at passersby is a warning flag, as is biting the trainer, he said.

"It's undesirable behavior," he said. "What you're seeing is the dog basically out of control."

Dunja was nervous and shy around people, a sign she wasn't socialized properly, he said. A shy dog is more likey to bite than one whose nerves are solid, he said.

Ralph Dezjego, regional public defender and co-counsel for Jeffrey Davidson, suggested to Brennaman that maybe a half-trained dog handler wouldn't see these signs. Videos might suggest to a layman that they could train their dogs easily, he said.

'Do you have to know what's going on before you can do anything about it?" Dezjego asked. Brennaman said no.

Jeanette Delanoy followed Brennaman as a witness. She worked at the same bowling alley as Jeffrey Davidson and gave him rides home sometimes.

One time, two of the Davidsons' Rottweilers jumped up and put their muzzles and paws on the driver's window of her car and bared their teeth, growling.

"Sabine called to them, but they didn't come immediately," she said. "Jeff had to grab them and pull them off."

More witnesses testified about their experiences with the Davidson's dogs. Rhiannon Garcia witnessed a German Shepherd nip two-year-old Victoria Davidson when she was babysitting in their home two years ago.

Tony Van Buren, a sergeant with the Kansas Highway Patrol and neighbor of the Davidsons', testified that he once grabbed a pistol and a baseball bat to chase the dogs away from a friend's children in his yard.

James Walls, another neighbor, said he opened the door at 7:00 the morning of Chris Wilson's attack to find his 14year-old Labrador backed against the door by the three Rottweilers.

Walls said he let his dog inside and grabbed his shotgun, which wasn't normal for him.

They were standing there panting like they had been running and were waiting for her to move," he said. "When I came back, they were in their pen."

Forty-five minutes later, Chris Wilson was dead.

The hearing will reconvene today at 1 p.m. and is expected to conclude today.

approximately $900,000. Because of the amount of federal and state aid, the construction project is being administered by KDOT. 'KDOT is doing a lot of the funding, and it must be established that the road meets their requirements," Diane Stoddard, assistant city manager, said. After the field-check by KDOT is complete, the city will be able to begin negotiations with landowners on the acquisition of property. Messer said the city will definitely need to acquire two houses and might have to purchase two more. He did say that land on some properties will need to be purchased in the right-of-way process. The houses cannot be acquired until KDOT gives an environmental clearance, which approves the effect the expansion will have on historical and archaeological sites, noise levels, wetlands, endangered species and socioeconomic factors.

Of the seven streets for which the city applied for KDOT funding, Anderson Avenue had the third-highest accident rate.

In the past two years, there have been 86 non-injury accidents, 23 injury accidents, three pedestrian/vehicle accidents and one fatality on Anderson.

Messer said the improvement of these roadways became a high priority to the city in early 1995 as they began looking for funding sources.

'Safety of the roadway to the traveling public is important. A lot of concerns we share impact homes and property," he said.

The next informational meeting on the Anderson Avenue improvement project will be this fall. Bidding on the construction begins in December of 1998.

"We want to present the community in a way that you will feel good about Manhattan when driving down K-177," Colantone said.

The goal of the site is to increase tourism in Manhattan.

"The return on the investment is much greater," Breta Bloomberg-Ellis, supporter of the center, said. "We need to look at this as economic development. Economic development is not just business and corporation expansion. It's tourism as well."

An emergency-shelter grant application administered by the Kansas Department of Commerce and Housing was also approved in Tuesday's meeting.

The grant application, which is due July 1, is for a possible $83,000 to help the homeless. City officials said they do not expect to get the total amount possible but expect to receive a portion of the funds, as they have every year since

The first reading of an ordinance amending the final development plan of the Williamsburg Planned Unit Development was also discussed Tuesday. The reading was approved by the commission in support of the plan to address the issue of a drainage problem in the area.

The water which is backing up in the area, is coming from an undersized box culvert and pipe crossing under Dickens and Browning avenues, Jack Messer, city engineer, said.

The final issue approved on the agenda was the calling of $730,000 in 1985 sewage-refunding revenue bonds on Sept. 1, 1997.

City Manager Gary Greer said doing this would mean that the water and sewer budgets will be debt-free.

Curt Wood, director of finance, said there was $730,000 in outstanding sewage-refunding bonds, and the average interest rate was an extremely high 9.08 percent.

By using sewage bond reserve money and available water funds to pay off the outstanding sewage bonds and the interest due by Sept. 1, 1997, the city can save approximately $60,000.

Owners will stand trial for dog mauling

▶ Past stories The E-Collegian has compiled stories regarding the Wilson incident. You can read them by going to (http://collegian.ksu. edu/links/wilson.html).

A court ruling decided the owners of three Rottweilers that attacked and killed an 11-year-old will stand trial for unintentional second-degree mur-

Magistrate Judge Tom Ball ruled there is sufficient evidence to charge Jeffrey and Sabine Davidson with extreme indifference to human life. If convicted, they each could face 11 to 50 years in prison under Kansas law.

The Davidsons had originally been charged with involuntary manslaughter for the April 24 death of Christopher Wilson outside their Milford home.

Geary County District Attorney Chris Biggs argued six points he said were proof of depraved heart, which would raise the degree of liability.

Biggs cited testimony from 29 witnesses, including Wilson's 9-year-old brother, Tramell, who watched his brother die while he was safe in a tree.

Wilson had told his brother to wait in the tree while he got down to check on the dogs, Tramell testified.

"I said 'Why,' and he just went down and didn't say anything," Tramell said.

Minutes later, his brother was killed.

Biggs said the dogs were not kept in a proper enclosure.

Witnesses testified that the backyard fence came loose easily and the dogs had escaped the night before the attack.

They were put back in their pen, but roamed the neighborhood again that morning.

Stampede.

Biggs also said the dog training the Davidsons used brought out violent

A dog-training expert testified there was evidence the dogs had been partially trained in Schutzhund, a form of protection training.

The Davidsons also knew children lived in the neighborhood and had not socialized the dogs so they would not react aggressively to them, Biggs said.

The dogs had specifically become aggressive around the Wilson brothers, Biggs said.

A co-worker of Jeffrey Davidson said one of the dogs had pinned his 3year-old daughter to the floor, growled and attempted to mount her.

The dogs had been allowed to roam at large and had provoked three different men to grab guns in their defense when the dogs came into their yards,

Finally, the Davidsons were poor dog handlers, he said.

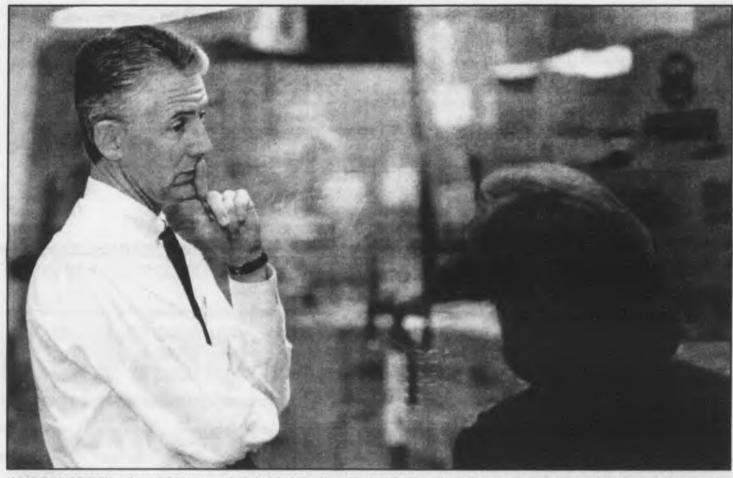

The dogs were not kenneled separately and were out of control, having packed to themselves instead of their handlers.

Furthermore, when other trainers would correct the dogs' behavior, they would be chided for ruining their Schutzhund dogs.

"I believe there were all kinds of warning signs here," Judge Ball said.

The arraignment for the Davidsons is set at 9 a.m. July 8 in Geary County.

Gov. Bill Graves said there are some challenges for Kansas, but said he felt good about the economy and unemployment during his visit to the Flint Hills Breadbasket and Manhattan Rotary Club Thursday.

Graves said education is always important in the race to stay competitive with the rest of

He said the $163 million being used to upgrade classrooms around the state is necessary because students need a positive learning environment.

Graves also said technology in the classroom is a shortcoming in universities like K-State, and money is needed to keep in step with other schools

Despite the challenges, Graves said the outlook for the state was good.

Graves said the economy is positive and outperforming expectations.

'We can talk about cutting taxes because of how good the economy is," Graves said.

Graves said the unemployment rate is at a record low, which resulted in a diminished labor pool.

"Job creation is driven by how strong the economy is," he said. The government is looking at the private sector for further help, Graves said.

Cessna has a program that trains welfare recipients to work on factory lines, Graves said. The end result is well-paid employees that no longer need assistance.

We are moving people off welfare roles at a record pace because of the demand of the economy," he said.

Graves said he was also pleased with the reduction in violent crime in Kansas.

"I believe crime is down because we are putting these people behind bars," he said. "As long you pay taxes, we will keep these people

Mid-level education majors to face new program of study pick up the cost."

Course requirements for education majors seeking certification in Kansas are changing July 1, but the change should not affect K-State students.

The State Department of Education has established a new program of study for middle-level education majors in English, social studies and science.

Effective July 1, education majors requesting certification in Kansas must complete the courses in the approved programs. Previously, they could take any 15 hours in their areas of study.

"Before, in order to get middle-school endorsement, the education major just had to have 15 hours in the subject," Candace Bond, certification officer in the College of Education, said. "Now there is an approved program for all universities in the state of Bond said K-State already meets the new requirements.

To be certified in Kansas, teachers must complete a teacher program with recommendations from the college, have taken recent credit hours and have completed testing, Cheryl Martin, office assistant in the Department of Education, said.

Certification testing includes taking a pre-professional skills test, which tests reading, mathematics and writing skills. Teachers must also complete the professional knowledge portion of the National Teachers Examination.

"We already have the approved program in effect at K-State, so it shouldn't have any effect on education majors here," Bond said.

Although the change will not affect K-State students, some colleges in Kansas haven't yet met the state requirements, and students from these schools may have to take additional hours to be eligible for certification.

"It's the institutions who have always given middle-level curriculum under the 15hour rule that will affected," Martin said.

Martin said students in schools with the approved program will have to work with a college that has an approved middle-level program and hope the college will accept the 15 hours already taken. "Certain colleges, like Friends University, don't have the approved program, but they've been able to give the middle-level endorsement," she said.

Rappelling accident injures off-duty officer

A Riley County police officer was injured while rappelling on the west side of the Tuttle Creek spillway Saturday at approximately 2:45 p.m.

Mark Rafuse, 28, was taken by ambulance to Mercy Health Center on College Avenue and then transported to KU Medical Rafuse underwent surgery early Sunday morning, according to the Riley County Police Department. The procedure left him with multiple screws and wires in his right foot, staples in his right ankle and his left knee and wrist in casts. He is currently listed in fair condition. Rafuse was attempting an Australian free descent when the accident occurred.

In this type of descent, the repeller free-falls off an overhang face-first. The repeller slowly comes to a stop by creating friction between the rope and the Figure 8, a braking device.

"The style he was attempting takes expertise," said Robert Sauerbrunn, shift sergeant at the Pottawatomie County Police Department.

This style is also against the rules, Steve Crouckish, park ranger, said. There are signs that explicitly state that Australian rappelling is not allowed," he said. "It's posted in a couple of places Utilizing a belay man is a security element of rappelling.

This person remains on the ground to create tension on the rope, should a slide or fall occur.

"Having a belay man is pretty much standard," Sauerbrunn said. "It's a safety factor."

Rafuse was rappelling alone.

According to witness reports, Rafuse came to a halt when he was approximately halfway down from the overhang. He apparently lost control and fell 40 feet to the ground.

"He messed up," Sauerbrunn said. "And besides, that area is off limits from Australian rappelling." It was later determined by the Army Corps of Engineers that Rafuse did not have a rappelling permit. "Even though he was an officer, even though he was injured, we still have to cover our bases. But the victim here is the Corps of Engineers," Sauerbrunn said. "They are actually in charge of However, no charges will be pressed against Rafuse.

"I don't want to add insult to injury," Paul Whitehouse, park ranger, said. "I don't think he's going to be able to repel for a long time."

Regents to review possible 2.8 percent tuition increase

NAKIA Y. WALLER

The Kansas Board of Regents will review the universities' fiscal year 1999 budget request this Thursday and decide if there will be a 2.8 percent tuition increase.

There would be $6.4 million generated from the possible tuition increase. A base tuition increase of 2.8 percent would contribute $4.5 million, and the additional $1 per credit hour tuition increase for equipment would total $1.9 million. These requests would affect Regents universities.

In a Regents meeting earlier this year, the board set guidelines on request for the FY 1999. The amounts and the activities that request additional funding was a key issue for the Regents. Barbara Conant, director of communications for the Regents, said K-State's main campus would not be receiving technology initiative funds. This decision was effected by K-State's switch to linear tuition. Based on the guidelines by the Regents, K-State's fiscal year budget is to include an Operating expenses and technology are two places where these funds would be spent. "As we increase tuition, 25 percent of the amount we can keep to try and keep up with peer universities," John Struve, K-

State budgeting director, said. Since the linear tuition change, K-State has applied for more existing funds stemming from their denial of the technology initiative funds. The original $7.5 million technology initiative funds is not part of the on-going yearly budget.

"Before line tuition we could better determine our needs. We will always take base funding over new," Struve said. In order to determine program enhancement and explore funding sources, a peer comparison of the Higher Education price index has been used. "The Regents usually establishes a theme, and this year's theme is technology," Struve said.

The University's yearly budget has two components - state funds and tuition.

Tuition accounts for one-third of the budget. Despite its exclusion from technologies funding, K-State is still making technology equipment improvements in the classroom. "We have $730,000 general program enhancements that's equipment related," Struve said.

4 injured in northeast Kansas plane crash

WAMEGO, Kan. - A single-engine plane crashed in a northeast Kansas corn field near Wamego Saturday, injuring all four people aboard, officials said.

The Beechcraft plane went down just north of the U.S. 24-Old Military Trail intersection around 4 p.m., a dispatcher with the Pottawatomie County Sheriff's office said. The craft landed on its belly, causing extensive damage to the plane.

The passengers suffered moderate injuries and were taken to a Wamego hospital for treatment, the dispatcher said.

The cause of the crash is under investigation.

KANSAS CITY, Kan. - The bodies of two men were discovered in the back of a pickup truck parked in an abandoned area of the city.

In addition to leading one of the state's most influential newspaper families, Seaton had a long history of devotion to social and civic projects.

CNS unveils K-State homepage synonym for better access Until recently, when World Wide Web surfers tried to find K-State's Web site by guessing the address was K-State, they were unsuccessful.

However, thanks to a synonym created by Computing and Network Services, the address will work just as well as the correct one.

Betsy Edwards, CNS assistant specialist, said the new address will help people who are looking for K-State's home page. "Some people looking for K-State on the Web don't have the faintest idea what the address is. KSU by itself doesn't automatically mean K-State," Edwards said. Ken Conrow, interim director of CNS, said there are other places in the world, including Kent State University and Kentucky State University, that could have easily been KSU, but K-State used the site name first. Conrow said there aren't any particular plans for the new address, and students should not be concerned because the old address is not going to change.

"It's going to help people who are guessing," he said. "It doesn't hurt the people who already know the KSU address." - Lance Ziesch, staff reporter

LANCE ZIESCH

There was a family reunion on campus last week.

At least, that's what it sounded like when about 60 vocal and instrumental music teachers from across the state gathered June 16-20 for the Ninth Annual Music Symposium

Jana Fallin, director of music education and symposium organizer, said, "It's kind of a combination family reunion, boot camp and revival. We're learning more about teaching music, and we are refreshing ourselves, too."

The symposium is an opportunity for music teachers to get together once a year and fellowship. The five-day workshop features topics such as learning about new technology and coping with problems in the classroom, and also includes performances by various school

Fallin said the philosophy of the workshop is to bring band and choral teachers from elementary through highschool levels together to work and build some camaraderie.

'We have certain threads in the arts. I feel like we need to work together, rather than fight amongst ourselves," Fallin said

Kappa Delta sorority could return to K-State

DAVID LOTT

Kappa Delta sorority could recolonize at K-State by August 1998. The sorority house has been vacant for more than four years.

Possible recolonization prospects look good for 1998, Susan Peterson, KD housing corporation president, said.

KD's members voted to close its doors in December 1993 after fighting decreasing membership.

A joint decision toward colonization would be made between the KD national organization and the Kansas

"Kappa Delta is gone so it can start fresh again," Peterson said.

The KD representative to the National Panhellenic Council has been to K-State since the house closed, and is excited about recolonization prospects, Peterson said.

The national organization would help set up recolonization plans and help with expenses, she said.

Alumnae of the chapter and the chapter from the University of Kansas could help during K-State's Rush Week in August.

"It would be treated like any other colonization request," Barb Robel, greek affairs adviser, said.

Projected enrollment figures are reviewed to measure possible rushing

Initial rush enrollment numbers increased from 493 in 1995 to 503 in 1996. Robel said.

Women might join a recolonizing sorority who necessarily wouldn't join an established sorority, she said. Immediate leadership opportunity could attract girls that would not initially go through rush to join a sorori-

Several steps have to be made to initiate the recolonization process. The K-State Panhellenic Council would have to vote to extend an invitation to KD to begin the colonization

An application for colonization must also be approved by the Associate Vice President for Institutional Advancement, according the K-State Panhellenic Constitution.

The Constitution reads that equal consideration will be given to all previous sororities on campus and sororities that have expressed interest of colonization.

Any new sorority must agree to provide housing similar to the other sororities within two to three years.

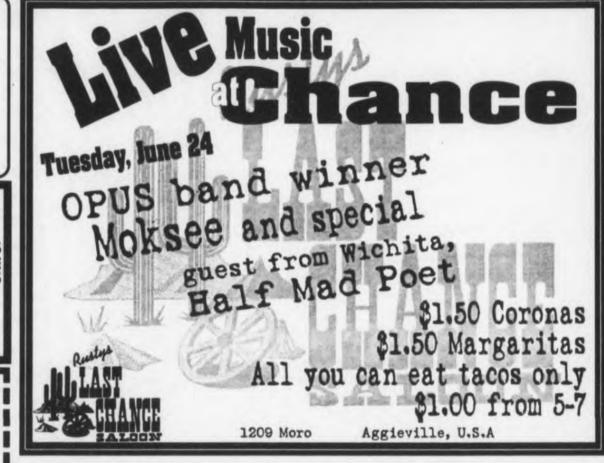

The KD's do have a home at 1220 Centennial that is maintained by the Manhattan Alumnae association. Peterson said the house is in good

The internal house is checked regularly by Peterson. Utilities like water and heat have been shut down. The lawn in maintained from March to October every year.

Lights around the parking lot are maintained, and the campus police patrol around the house like the other sororities for security purposes.

Alphuset Soup Hidden predictions floating in Torah omputers are wonderful tools.

They speed up productivity to levels undreamed of years before. They let us communicate and send information over long distances.

They perform menial tasks quickly that, if performed by people, would drive them insane. Of course, when staring down the barrel of "The Bible Code," a new release by journalist Michael Drosnin, you begin wondering just how much work this man chipped in by hand. The book details a method of uncovering hidden messages in the Torah, the first five books of the read, in Hebrew, into the computer sequentially and then regurgitated according to a specific pattern into a sheet not unlike a giant word search. The computer then scans this linguistic linguine for any recognizable words formed by this matrix. Sounds like an interesting exercise, doesn't it? "Interesting" doesn't capture the potential of Drosnin's giant Scrabble game gone berserk. Several of his discoveries are unnerving. Crossing a spelling of "Yitzhak Rabin" is, spelled backwards, the Hebrew for "assassin will assassinate."

Drosnin, upon discovering this, took a flight to to find an obtuse, shrouded reference to some his-Israel and delivered a letter of warning to the Israeli prime minister, a full year before Rabin's assassination, which followed a peace rally.

Or, if that is too globally removed, what would you do if in your word search you found, running from the bottom of the page to the top, the phrase "President Kennedy die"? Or, afterwards, you found, scattered amongst the letters around the phrase, the letters spelling "Dallas"?

"The Bible Code" details references to other historic events encoded in the Torah. From the Great Depression ("Economic collapse" and "1929") to Hiroshima ("Japan," "Atomic holocaust" and "1945") and possibly beyond (including a possible reference to a nuclear attack on Jerusalem in the next ten years), it's in there, if you just tweak all the letters just right.

Now, before anyone decides to start plugging in their Bibles and looking for the winner of the next Super Bowl, there are a few important things about Drosnin's code, which bear remembering.

First of all, there are only 304,805 Hebrew letters in the Torah. The grid that forms the "Yitzhak Rabin" prophecy is 4,772 letters across.

If you give me over a quarter-of-a-million letters in a grid that size, I can spell out "My sister Roxanne attacked the tarantula with the Ronco Silly Driller." A supercomputer had better be able torical event given that much material to play with.

As for the Kennedy reference, it should be noted that "Dallas" in Hebrew only has five letters, and these letters aren't even adjacent to each other in the Kennedy grid. I just wish I knew how to spell "Marilyn Monroe" in Hebrew.

Drosnin's code is a semantic Rorschach test, reflecting in a swirling mass of letters exactly what the viewer wants or fears to see.

Granted, perhaps through the spirit of coincidence, some words are spelled out in close proximity to each other. It is still entirely up to the reader to interpret which words to accept as relevant, which to dismiss as accidental and what those words mean.

A Harvard mathematician has indicated that the Rabin/assassination cross could be seen by Israeli fundamentalists as a reflection upon the man himself, that Rabin was an assassin killing the Israeli people though his peace initiatives.

I am certain that if you took the Manhattan phone book and processed it similarly to the Torah according to Drosnin's method, you could arrive at similar profundities and predictions. But I'm not saying you should. This is not a work to be undertaken lightly, if at all.

Some people have just too much time on their

Duck and dodge: Skills help columnist avoid telemarketers

"Hello, is Mr./Ms. (insert your last name here - be sure to mispronounce it) home?"

Assume that you responded, "Yes, speaking." 'Hi sir/miss, my name is Frank, and I am calling on behalf of the Smith Publishing Company. We publish many of the magazines you read, and, as a valued former subscriber, we would like to offer

I have tried to avoid these calls, but they keep coming.

I have even tried my own methods of ending these annoying, time-consuming calls. Telemarketers just don't seem to get the picture. I am a poor college student, and I don't have $9.99 a week to spend on magazine subscriptions. I have no need for a membership to a travel club that offers me discounted airfare. Not only do I have no money for these trips, but, thanks to evil Collegian editors and their meetings and deadlines, I have no time to take a vacation. I don't have Caller ID, so I cannot screen my calls unless I go through answering machine. Often I end up getting one of those calls I do not want offering me something that cannot

They always seem to get me when I am the busiest or heading out the door. I have figured out that, although it may be rude, you can just hang up on the poor schmo on the other end of the call.

However, someone will probably call back later offering the same product, service or opportunity.

Call waiting can be a good thing. You can say, "Excuse me, I have another call coming in," which seems less rude. The telemarketer could very well believe that you had a more important call come in (and how many calls couldn't be more important?).

Sometimes you will get lucky, and there will actually be an incoming call to save you. This also stalls the telemarketer face-off, unless the other call is a telemarketer. (This actually happened to me.)

You could always act surprised when the caller asks for you and say in a surprised voice, "May I ask who is calling?" and follow that with, "Haven't you heard he died last week?" Although, this could be bad, depending on just what company is calling you. You probably wouldn't want your credit card company to think you were dead and cancel your accounts. My favorite method is to say that I am not home right now and ask the caller if I could take a message. The usual reply is something like "This is John from MCI. When would be a good time to reach him?" Make sure you tell the caller a time when you will be home to answer the phone so you can put it off once again. This way you can continue this prank on those damn long-distance companies for a good month and then finally say, "No, I am not interested in your product. Thank you, goodbye."

I even found out last week that I could possibly get these unsolicited incoming calls on my cellular phone, for which I would be charged air time. The flyer that was included in my bill said that telemarketers around the country are calling customers on their cellular phones to try to solicit busi-Hey, all you telemarketers out there, don't call me on my cell phone or I will be very hacked off. However, whether you receive these phone calls at home or on your cellular phone you have several rights. First, you can tell the caller to remove your number from their calling list, and they are required to take you off the list. Also, you can ask how they got your phone number.

The way I see it, you may get off one list, but you can't get off all of them.

Why not just be rude to the caller?

READER SEES BAILEY COLUMN AS CAUSE FOR DESPAIR, PAIN

Editor, I write with a heavy heart.

Reading Kevin Bailey's June 19 column on morality is another example of why so many people find Christianity offensive to their compassionate sensi-

It is clear that Mr. Bailey is a sincere man who wants the best for the world.

That's why I think perhaps he is not aware of the amount of arrogance and ignorance necessary to make statements such as he has made in his column. He must not be aware that he is contributing to the suffering of innocent people.

Particularly bothersome is his attempt to lump "militias, the Ku Klux Klan, gangsta rap and homosexual activists" all together.

I may not be a fan of what gangsta rap espouses, but it is insulting to compare it to militias and the KKK. It is partly because of Klan-like attitudes that gangsta rap emerged in the first place. And to compare the KKK with the struggle of gays and lesbians to be accepted as full human beings is one of the most cruel and offensive statements he could have made. It is attitudes like that that keep the suicide rate of our gay youth so high. Deaths that are completely tragic, and deaths for which I now hold Kevin Bailey partly responsible.

I see Mr. Bailey often on campus and in the coffee shops. But I will no longer be able to look him in the face. I will be too busy looking at the blood on his

Women's basketball makes leap into professional arena with WNBA

ASSOCIATED PRESS AND R.J. DIEPENBROCK

Women's basketball is moving into the national spotlight with the inauguration of the Women's National Basketball Association

The first WNBA game Saturday featured the New York Liberty and Los Angeles Sparks.

"This will have an enormous causative effect on the women's game," Deb Patterson, K-State women's basketball coach, said.

Patterson said with the first game being sold out and other games showing high attendance, the WNBA would have a chance to grow and expand.

Brit Jacobson, senior guard for the K-State women's team, said the attention gained by women's basketball in the last few years has proved the time is right.

"Never before could girls dream of playing anything but college basketball," Jacobson said. "With the ABL, and now the WNBA, girls now have something to dream about. One of Jacobson's teammates, Andria Jones, tried out for the Utah Starzz of the WNBA, but was drafted instead by the American Basketball League's Columbus Quest. She'll go to tryouts later this year. The ABL was the only professional women's basketball league, but gained little national coverage during its first season last year.

However, with the publicity surrounding the WNBA, the ABL might get

The NBA approved the WNBA, an eight-team league with two divisions, in 1996, and has worked to promote it through television ads this year.

There has been an incredible promotional support," Patterson said. "The league also has financial backing."

Jon Holliday, Holton High School girls basketball coach, said he thought the league would be a success.

"Now they have a chance to fulfill a dream," Holliday said.

Saturday's game was the top story on ESPN's Sportscenter, and virtually all other sports broadcasts. In addition to the large television audience, the game, which took place in Los Angeles, outdrew the average attendance of the cross-town Clippers of the NBA.

While the game didn't feature any highlight-reel slam dunks - Lisa Leslie barely missed on an uncontested attempt - the game did highlight the abilities of women to play basketball.

ANDRIA JONES, number 34, tried out for the Utah Starzz and will possibly join the ABL after her career with the Cats.

Jones competes in professional basketball tryouts in Utah, considers joining ABL's Columbus Quest

After leading Ohio's Buckeye Valley High School to a district and league championship and becoming the school's alltime leading scorer along the way with more than 1,200 points, Andria Jones was just excited to play college ball.

Never did she dare dream as a freshman at K-State that she would someday have the opportunity to play professional bas-

How the times have changed for Jones and other college

The two professional women's basketball leagues, the WNBA and ABL, materialized into existence the last two years, and have offered dominate college stars an opportunity to make a living putting a ball through a nylon net.

One would think life couldn't be better for Jones, but she's keeping low key about her new-found opportunities.

"Going pro isn't all hyped up like the men. Hopefully someday it will be," Jones said.

The WNBA began its inaugural season with a bang Saturday. Unfortunately, after Jones had a brief tryout with the Utah Starzz, she was not invited to play on the team.

"Utah is beautiful. I love Salt Lake City. It was gorgeous," she said. "There were mountains right by where we were practicing."

The tryout Jones attended was a four-day open tryout void of cuts. More than 140 women ranging from their early 20s to mid 30s, along with one 50-year-old, competed for two spots on the Starzz.

On Jones' first day, she found herself playing point guard on a team of all post players.

The Starzz elected to substitute players in and out every

"It was kind of crazy, because I didn't get to do a whole lot," Jones said. "Lots of times if you didn't take the ball up and down the court yourself you didn't get it, because everyone was for themselves." Jones need not fret about her unsuccessful Starzz tryout. There is another league, the ABL, and she was drafted in the sixth round to play for the Columbus Quest. Not only is Jones returning to her native state to try and play basketball once again, but she will be reunited with former K-State coach Brian Agler. Agler is the coach and general manager of the Quest. 'He knows me, and he knows what I'm capable of," Jones said. "Maybe it's a plus or maybe it's a bad thing."

Although Jones is not under contract, she has been invited to participate in the Quest's two-week tryout session. There, Jones will get a better opportunity to show her skills.

Women find pride in record-setting crowds

ASSOCIATED PRESS

INGLEWOOD, Calif. - Lisa Leslie wanted to make a statement for women's pro basketball with a dunk in the inaugural WNBA game Saturday. But her legs failed her.

Leslie got out in front with the ball and charged to the basket. The crowd of 14,284 at the Forum - largest to attend a women's pro game in the United States was ready to roar, but she missed. Mwadi Mabika was right behind and put

"I thought it would be big for women's basketball," Leslie said. "I thought if I could get up and do it, it would be a good opportunity. I kind of ran into the front of the rim."

Penny Toler reserved her spot in history by hitting an 11-foot jumper barely a minute into the contest for the WNBA's first basket.

Toler and her purple-and-gold-clad Los Angeles Sparks teammates lost to the New York Liberty 67-57, but the final score in the sloppily played game hardly mattered to the fans.

"They were even cheering for free throws," Leslie said. "We were overwhelmed by it."

A normal sellout for a Sparks game would be 8,505, but high demand prompted extra-seating sections to be opened up.

Lindsey Mahoney, 15, who plays basketball on the Brentwood High girls team, was thrilled to be part of a historic day in professional sports.

"I think it's incredible. It's so much fun," she said. "The fact that this is women, and this is what one of us could

Outside the Forum, carnival rides entertained fans before the game started. Inside, they raised a ruckus when New York guard Teresa Weatherspoon dove for the ball and went sprawling headfirst into the baseline chairs in the league's first courtside collision.

When you've been dreaming about it for the past year, it's almost like an out-of-body experience," Liberty star Rebecca Lobo said. "Even now to think about the game, it's a clutter in my

The nationally televised game opened the 28-game season of the WNBA, which joins the American Basketball League as the only U.S. pro hoops leagues for women.

Leslie, who grew up in Inglewood where she was a 6-foot seventh grader, sent the opening tip of the orange and white ball to former Stanford star Jamila Wideman. But the highly touted matchup between Leslie and former Olympic teammate Lobo failed to materialize.

Leslie finished with 16 points and 14 rebounds to Lobo's 16 points and six rebounds. The duo led the United States to a gold medal in last summer's Atlanta

"I didn't feel pressure," Lobo said. "I was just really excited. On my first bunch of shots I just couldn't find a rhythm."

Kym Hampton scored New York's first basket on a driving layup 15 seconds after Toler made history. Rhonda Blades, who played at Vanderbilt, scored the first 3-pointer with an assist by Lobo late in the first half.

Both teams got off to a spotty start, with the Liberty missing 11 of its first 16 shots and Los Angeles similarly shaky on 3-of-14 shooting.

"This is how hard we're going to play. We're going to take care of the ball better, and we're going to shoot better," Lobo said. "Today was a bit of an ugly game, but it wasn't for lack of effort."

New York shot 43 percent to 31 percent for the Sparks. Turnovers plagued both teams, with the Liberty committing 19 to 25 for Los Angeles.

Magic Johnson predicted the level of play would improve.

"I think it's great," he said. "Both teams were really nervous because they were so excited. You're going to see that every week they're going to get better

The crowd yelled when Sparks center Zheng Haixa of China planted her size 18 shoes in the paint and hit a jumper over Lobo.

At 6-foot-8, 254 pounds, Zheng is only slightly smaller than Utah star Karl Malone. The four-time Olympian doesn't have Malone's game, however, getting eight points and five rebounds in a reserve role.

Players on both benches watched and smiled as roller skaters cruised the Forum's hardwood floor, and young girls waved flags representing the WNBA's eight teams during pregame festivities.

They made way for a tiny darkhaired girl, who ran toward the basket and with the help of a tall man, recorded the day's only dunk.

Kansas City squeaks past Milwaukee, 6-5

MILWAUKEE - Bob Wickman planned to throw Chili Davis a pitch to hit on the ground. Not one to belt out of the park.

Davis hit a three-run homer off Wickman in the eighth inning Sunday to rally the Kansas City Royals to a 6-5 win over Milwaukee, ending the Brewers' four-game winning streak.

"I don't think he was supposed to throw that pitch where it was," Davis said.

"He left a slider out over the plate. In that situation, if they're not going to walk me, then I've got to try and get a mistake to drive, and he made a mis-four hits, to start the eighth after Milwaukee had taken a 4-3 lead in the seventh with three runs.

Chris Haney pitched the eighth and Jeff Montgomery gave up a two-out homer to Jeromy Burnitz in the ninth before getting his second save.

Trailing 4-3, Jose Offerman reached on second baseman Mark Loretta's error to open the eighth, and Tom Goodwin singled.

Wickman (4-3) relieved Brewers thing," said Davis, who had struck out starter Ben McDonald, who allowed twice and grounded into a double play in his previous at-bats. "I went up there trying to do something I hadn't done all day, which was keep my fat butt over the plate and quit pulling off pitches."

Wickman said he had tried to throw a slider down and in the dirt.

"I made a bad pitch, and he hit it out of the ballpark," Wickman said. "I was trying to get a ground ball, keep it in the infield. I ended up hanging it. I was thinking I didn't want to throw a strike there.

The Brewers took a 1-0 lead in the first on Dave Nilsson's RBI single.

Controversy brews as male hired to be Huskers' women's basketball coach

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The University of Nebraska has named Western Kentucky's Paul Sanderford as its new women's basketball coach, despite the protests of several state lawmakers.

"We are pleased to have a coach of Paul Sanderford's caliber join our program. Paul is regarded as one of the top-10 women's basketball coaches in the country," NU athletic director Bill Byrne said at a press conference Thursday night announcing the new coach.

Sanderford comes to Nebraska after 15 years as head coach at Western Kentucky with a 365-120 record. He led the Lady Toppers to 12 NCAA Tournaments, two National Women's Invitational Tournaments, three NCAA Final Fours and the 1992 national championship game.

"I'm at Nebraska because of (football) Coach (Tom) Osborne, and his program is a model program," Sanderford said during a press conference Thursday. "Coach Osborne's success will allow me to get into homes that I couldn't at Western Kentucky. It allows me that national exposure, I think you have to have to get the elite athletes to a win a national championship."

Reports last week that Sanderford was to be named head coach drew criticism from the floor of the Nebraska Legislature.

Sen. Chris Beutler of Lincoln said he found it incredibly difficult to believe there was no female coach in the nation qualified to run the Nebraska program.

"While we had an excellent group of candidates to choose from, Paul's credentials and experience were the deciding factors," Byrne said Thursday. Sen. Ernie Chambers of Omaha and Sen. Don Wesely of Lincoln persuaded legislators recently to withhold I percent of general funds appropriated to the university if it does not meet goals of hiring more women and minorities.

Sanderford is replacing Angela Beck, who resigned after 11 seasons at Nebraska to become head coach and assistant general manager of the San Jose Lasers of the women's professional American Basketball League.

"I understand what they're upset about," Sanderford said of the gender issue. "I wish they would look at credentials and what I can bring to this program and offer to these young ladies who play basketball." Sanderford said he did not apply for the job but was approached by the university. Chambers said he would object if the new coach was paid considerably more than Beck, whose base

Byrne said Sanderford's base salary will be $120,000, the same as Nebraska head men's basketball coach Danny Nee. Byrne said the university was planning to increase the women's coaching position's salary

Baseball players aren't what they used to be ttention baseball purists: Go away!

Now that we've reached the month of interleague play, and the year of the Griffey, self-proclaimed baseball purists are pulling their hair out, crying for baseball days of old. They say tradition is ruined, that baseball wrecked itself by letting the Yankees and Mets play each other during a regular season game. They're too blinded by socalled tradition to realize that the intensity generated during the New York-New York games brought about an excitement that hasn't been felt since the baseball days of old.

What's so horrible SAM FELSENFELD is a senior in about this? If print journalism. You can e-mail you think comments to Sam at your comments (sef8701@ksu.edu). baseball isn't that we've seen round one of interleague play, then this is a great time for a little his-Baseball lost its purity in 1939 when the first night game was played. It became a little more soiled in 1969 when each league split into two divisions, creating post-season play other than the World Series. Three years later, Major League Baseball witnessed its first strike. Not very pure. And in 1973, Ron Blomberg forever tarnished the game when he became the first designated hitter.

In 1981, baseball suffered through another strike. The Cincinnati Reds played to the best record in baseball, but didn't even qualify for the playoffs because they didn't win their division for either of the halves.

Union in August of 1985. At least the next work stoppage didn't come around for five In 1990, the owners locked the players out at the beginning of the season. Spring training was shorter, the season started and ended late, and, for the first part of the season, starting

It only took four years for the next shutdown, a two-day strike by the Players' pitchers only needed to make it through three innings to qualify for the win. And then, in 1994, Bud Selig oneupped God. Selig canceled the World Series. God tried to in 1989, when he set off an earthquake with a magnitude of 6.9 near San Francisco, but he was unsuccessful. Baseball spent a week catching its breath, but it bounced back and finished up the World Series. Selig, however, canceled the postseason in 1994. That's something two world wars, a game-fixing scandal and that little conflict out in Vietnam couldn't do. That's something God couldn't even do. But Bud Selig, some guy causing trouble in Wisconsin, pulled it off. Sounds about as pure as a mutt So, what's the big deal about interleague play? Judging by comments from the purists, you'd actually think baseball's doing something wrong. And if you think the whining is bad now, just wait until mid-September, when Ken Griffey Jr. establishes a new singleseason home-run record. Can't wait to hear what the purists have to say then. They'll whine for the days of Babe Ruth, Jimmie Foxx, Roger Maris and Mel Ott.

Those players couldn't hold a candle to today's stars. Now, they're bigger, stronger, faster and smarter. Workout programs and scouting reports put the good old days of baseball to shame. Today, Babe Ruth would be nothing more than a white Cecil Fielder.

How much game film do you think Cy Young looked at before facing batters? Do you think he knew how to face Babe Ruth as well as David Cone knows how to pitch to Griffey?

And Griffey's fundamentals are definitely better. You've seen his swing.

Today, kids grow up playing in yearround leagues, getting constant experience and playing time, and studying the game. They know how to play the game well by the time they're 10 years old. And then, they keep getting better.

Oh, and another thing about today's competition. It's not just the best white Americans. It's the best players from all over the world. Japan, Korea, Mexico, Puerto Rico - you name it, they're pitching to Griffey. They don't need to be white to qualify. They just need four different pitches and a 95-mph fastball that moves. And you don't get four looks at the same pitcher any more. Once the seventh inning rolls around, a fresh arm comes in each inning. Today's batters aren't watching Walter Johnson hang a curve for their last two atbats, they're staring down Troy Percival's loaded gun, trying to catch up with his 99-mph heat. Let's see Babe Ruth do that.

RENE EICHEM

he KSU Summer Theatre presented "Charley's Aunt" Thursday night to a small, but delighted, crowd.

The play, written by Brandon Thomas, was updated from its original 1890s era to the 1950s. Director Charlotte MacFarland wrote in the playbill that due to small summer budgets, the use of original Victorian period costumes was impossible. The play was adapted because the theater had costumes in stock from

For the most part, the adaptation was believable. The set, an ivy league university and costumes, were authentic and took the audience back in time to the era of rock 'n' roll, petticoats, Coca-Cola, Life magazine and cat-eye glasses.

When the play opened to the lively tune of "La Bamba," the audience saw Brasset (Brad Good), the custodian, dancing to the music with his broom and feather duster, and doing the limbo instead of cleaning the dorm room of Jack Chesney (Paige Smith). Jack and his friend Charley Wykeham (Kevin Bishop) were in a bit of a pickle because the young men were in love with Kitty Verdun (Vanessa Vaughn) and Amy Spettigue (Vicki Cushenbery) respectively, but the girls weren't aware of the men's affections.

The young ladies were to be sent away in a day, though, and the men wanted to declare their undying love to their sweethearts before they

Because their beloveds weren't allowed alone in the company of single men, especially in a dorm room, the men planned to invite the girls to lunch.

Accompanying them to make it proper was Charley's aunt, Donna

Lucia, whom Charley has never met but, arriving that afternoon by train.

When the widowed, wealthy aunt sent word that she wouldn't be able to make it that afternoon after all, the boys were in a panic knowing they wouldn't be able to court Kitty and Amy without the aunt

When their good friend Babberley Fancourt (Tyler Lansdown) arrived dressed as a woman for a part in a theatrical production, the men hatched a plan that soon went awry.

Suddenly Fancourt became Aunt Donna Lucia, and everyone who met her attempted to win her over for their own personal gain, until the real Donna Lucia (Jennifer Grace) arrived with Ela Delahay (Shelley Befort), a befriended orphan, in town.

The three-act play moved with such quickness and side-splitting hilarity that it was over before the audience knew it. The intermissions were almost as much fun to watch as the play. Cast members would reenter the stage in character and change the props and scenery while 1950s music kept the audience dancing in their seats to such tunes as "Wooly Bully" and "Lollipop."

Lansdown played his role as the faux aunt with such hilarious fervor that the audience ate it up. His dress, wig and voice made him the "Tootsie" of the 1950s.

When he leaned back in his chair at one point and threw bits of food up in the air and caught it in his mouth, all the while dressed as the aunt, the audience realized that this character is going to steal the Summer theater productions continue through the end of June and beginning of July.

Students involved have been working on the shows nine hours a day, six days a week.

The play "Charley's Aunt" was originally set in the 1800s but has been moved forward to the 1950s.

"I have updated the play to the 1950s because of our limited summer budget," Charlotte MacFarland, director, said.

In MacFarland's opinion, the original characters were generic. "The actors have helped create their characters," MacFarland said. This creativity was demonstrated in the first scene of the play when Brad Good, who plays Brassett the custodian, made Elvis Presley hip gyrations to the music of "La Bamba. MacFarland said she sees the 1800s and the 1950s as similar times where women were expected to marry well and not worry about a career. "Charley's Aunt" takes place in wealthy Harvard men's quarters. The play involves Charley and Jack who want to propose to their girlfriends. The problem arises when an unexpected visit from Charley's aunt turns into decep-

Little did Charley and Jack know that the real aunt would arrive and bring huge problems.

The play is a little hard to understand at the beginning, but during the second act, it all comes into place," MacFarland said.

Local businesses offer alternative cable service

RENE EICHEM

Heartland Wireless of Manhattan is one of the local alternatives to cable. In the Manhattan area since 1996, Heartland works like cable television but without the cable. Instead, FM microwave signals are picked up by the television via an antenna which has been strategically placed to pick up viable signals.

'The antenna looks like a bent barbecue grill," Ty Burson, general manager for Heartland, said. "The antenna we use will vary in size, depending on the location of the home and what interference the signals may encounter - hills, trees, buildings, etcetera.'

If the home has already been wired for regular cable, then Heartland's job is easier, and the savings is passed on to the consumer.

"For a new house, which hasn't already been wired for cable, we charge a $25 installation fee plus the first month's usage fee," Burson said. "If the house is already wired, there's no installation charge. Either way, there's nothing to buy

Prices for Heartland services were higher at the beginning of the year, but the prices decreased recently.

"I certainly don't expect prices to go down," Burson said. "We are licensed for 31 channels, so we plan on adding another 11 channels over time. We have all the local channels out of Topeka - including ABC, NBC and CBS and Fox out of Salina.

"We can give rural areas that are within the 30 to 50 mile radius of our towers access to TV programming that they otherwise wouldn't be able to get. Some of these homes have televisions that have barely been able to pick up one or two stations," Burson said.

Heartland also leases its services to the local

"We don't pay a city franchise fee because we don't use the city streets or right-of-ways," Burson said. "However, last year we gave $50,000 back to the school district."

Primestar is working on a satellite dish that will make it possible for its customers to pick up local television channels. A 13-inch satellite is currently under construction, and it will work in conjunction with cable to bring consumers local channels via satellite.

Currently, there are no satellites that also pull in local channels because local stations don't broadcast to satellite Primestar, a partner of TCI, has 1.75 million subscribers nation-wide and approximately 1,100 subscribers in the Manhattan and Junction City area.

"My local areas include Manhattan, Junction City and the surrounding communities," Craig Scholz, direct sales representative in Manhattan, said. "We service those people who can't get cable or who aren't happy with their cable company."

Primestar's current customers won't need to upgrade to the new satellite when it's available, though, because either dish will work to bring in local channels under the new system.

Robinson said the new, smaller satellite would be available sometime soon.

Currently, Primestar advertises digital satellite television for about a dollar a day, but costs can go higher depending on the programming package the customer selects.

The satellite is only compatible with Primestar, so after the customer buys the equipment, they can't use any other satellite compa-

Each Primestar package has 10 Pay-Per-View channels.

Instead of having a separate box, the remote control is programmed with all the information needed so the customers can switch to the event they want to watch and push the appropriate buttons on the remote.

"There aren't any phone calls to make," Robinson said, "because everything you need is on the remote."

Another cable alternative is Ken's Satellite Center. It offers satellite systems, antennas and DirecTv.

Sixteen years ago when Ken's first started in the satellite business, the satellite dishes were 10-to 12-feet tall and sold for $3,000 to $4,000.

"You can also rent one of our larger satellite dishes," Ken Wilson satellite manager, said. "Monthly rental on the bigger dish runs about $39.95, which includes your choice of 12 channels, not including premiums, plus all of the free networks.

You also have to pay $250 for installation, but there's no contract or other fees. We don't offer rental on our smaller dishes, as they are only for sale," Wilson said.

Satellite services also have Pay-Per-View channels, with no additional converter box needed. Movies are $2.99, and special events go as high as $39.95, Wilson said.

The Tyson-Holyfield fight would be $39.95, Wilson said.

"You can also put a rating guidance on any of our systems," Wilson said.

"If you have children, you can set it so as soon as an R-rated movie airs, it shuts off unless you enter your PIN. You can also block individual channels completely out on your own," he said.

Wilson said if there's ever a problem with one of their dishes, they can usually fix it within 24 to 48 business hours.

"If we can't make an appointment, we reschedule it and work until the job is done," Wilson said. "We probably have a 98-percent success rate of being on time."

Another system Ken's offers is DirecTv. which is another satellite option

Because local channels aren't broadcast to satellite systems, a satellite user won't be able to watch the local news, weather and sports. The customer needs a separate antenna, rabbit ears or cable to pick up those stations.

"The only real advantage to DirecTv is that it gives you about 10 times more sports than a regular dish and about 50 to 60 more Pay-Per-View channels," Wilson said. "So if you're into sports or movies, DirecTv is the way to go."

The play's physical nature also had a harmful effect on the props. A scene with a champagne bottle ended up with broken glass, fizzing liquid and a statue of an angel, which was sacrificed during a chase scene.

The women in the show did not get to do any stunt work, but they did have fun with the costumes. Poodle skirts and cat's eye style eye-liner adorned many of the women.

"The makeup and costumes were the coolest part," Jennifer Grace, Charley's real aunt, said.

"It has been a crazy show to work on and now everything seems be falling into place," MacFarland said.

MacFarland will not have a break any time soon. Due to the departure of Luke Kahlich, MacFarland will also be directing the musical "Man of La Mancha" in the fall. In spring semester, she will also be directing William Shakespeare's "Tempest."

after boring day. For children participating in a program sponsored by K-State's Division of Continuing Education, summertime is filled with days of activities, programs and fun. Summer Adventure is back for the 12th

Justin Wild, on-site coordinator for Summer Adventure and 1997 K-State graduate, said the program's goal is to encourage self-expression.

Students are encouraged to use their creativity in both group and individual projects. We play all sorts of games, but one of my favorite things is drama class. We get to make up our own plays," Colin Husted, third grader at the camp, said. Art classes give children a chance to show off their artistic abilities. 'We've made Indian vests and posters," Logan Hoover, third grader at the camp, said.

Games are incorporated throughout the day to give children a break. An updated version of hide-and-seek is a favorite among some children.

We get to play sardines. Someone hides and then whoever finds them stays and hides with them," Hannah Kulakow, second grader at the camp, said.

Danelle Badura, camp teacher and 1997 K-State graduate, said swimming is the children's favorite activity. Each day, the children have a 30-minute lesson.

Josh Hughey, second-grade participant, agreed swimming was the best part of the day. "Swimming is my favorite. We get to jump off the diving boards," he said.

In the midst of all the daily activities, the program emphasizes that summer is a time

"The most important thing is that it is fun and educational. They have been in school for nine months, and it wouldn't be fun if they had a really strict environment," Wild said.

The cost of lunch is included in the program. Children are allotted $3.50 for lunch at the K-State Student Union. They are encouraged to select their own meals. "It's funny to watch the children get to make decisions that their parents usually make. They love being able to choose their own food," Annie Cruse, camp teacher and senior in education, said. "And since they can only spend a certain amount of money, they have to consider how much things cost."

The program's teachers are comprised of education majors and people who have experience with large groups of children. Prospective teachers were interviewed this

Teachers are given the freedom to choose the lessons they will be teaching.

"It's exciting to be able to use my own ideas for each day's curriculum. I start student teaching in the fall, so I need practice at coming up with fun lessons," Cruse said.

The biggest advantage of being a teacher at Summer Adventure is the hands-on job experience you get, Wild said.

The experience that it gives you prepares you for the professional field," he said. After working with the children day in and day out, Wild said he has learned that children have some surprising qualities.

"Kids have a very sophisticated sense of humor. People don't credit them with being intelligent. Kids can be just as mature at the age of eight as at the age of 18," he said.

t looked as if George Jetson had cruised into Manhattan Tuesday.

Thirty-six solar-powered vehicles from universities across North America filled Bramlage Coliseum's parking lot Tuesday. The vehicles, which are part of Sunrayce 97, a biennial intercollegiate competition to design, build and race solar-powered cars, are racing from ndianapolis to Colorado Springs from June 19-28.

K-State's vehicle, Solution, finished Tuesday's competition in six hours, 17 minutes and 53 seconds, placing 22nd out of 36 teams. It averaged 34 mph and looked like a combination of an Indy racing car and a spaceship. The team started designing the car about one and a half years ago. "We did all the construction ourselves, except some of the welding and the solar encapsulation," Daren Sommers, senior in electrical engineering, said. Solar encapsulation is the process of building the solar panels that provide energy for the "Some of our team members wrote software for the car that sends data on the voltage and power in the batteries and transmits it to our computer," he said. The teams said Tuesday's route from Lee's Summit, Mo., to Manhattan was one of the toughest, and that was only partly due to the lack of sun. "I've heard other teams say the hill off of Tuttle Creek Boulevard on Kimball Avenue was the worst on the route," Sommers said. "Some teams even stopped and pushed their cars up the hill." Not all the vehicles made it on their own into Manhattan. The University of New Orleans' car was towed into Manhattan when it ran out of energy The penalty for towing is a time of eight and a half hours for that day, plus three minutes for every mile towed. The cars have to obey all traffic laws, must not exceed 55 mph, must pull over if more than six cars are waiting behind them and drivers must weigh at least 176 pounds.

New ID card with additions debuts in fall

Approximately 25,000 K-State students, faculty and staff will be using a new identification card this fall.

The card has expanded features and can be used in vending machines and as a phone card.

Cardholders will also be able to use the card for banking services at the new Commerce Branch Bank in the K-State Student Union and to make purchases from local Manhattan merchants.

Not all local merchants are excited about the new card, though. Steve Ballard, owner of Ballard Sporting Goods in Aggieville, said he questions why students would want to use the card. "It comes straight out of their checking account," he said. His store will participate in the program, but he has to pay $500 for new equipment to process the cards.

"It's not advantageous to us," Ballard said. "It just costs us more." Despite the initial investment for equipment, merchants will receive free advertising in the form of Collegian ads and promotional flyers and exclusive promotion at university and cultural events. "We do want to be able to honor it and want students to be able to make their purchases here." Ballard said.

Eileen Meyer, store director of Streetside Records, said she agrees.

Meyer said she wants to make it easy for students to make a purchase.

"We are just happy to get the sale," She said. "Whatever is easiest for them, whatever is legal. Except payment in livestock, I have no problem.

Meyer said she sees it as an alternative method of buying the product. She said she is lucky because one of her other stores had an extra machine, and all she has to do is reprogram it.

The expense of buying or leasing the new equipment has caused some businesses to hesitate, though. Many old terminals do not have enough memory, so new equipment is necessary. Size and logistics require some stores or bars to have more than one machine, pushing the expenditure to more than $800.

Participating businesses will also pay a processing fee. Similar to other credit fees, the cost would average 2-4 percent of each purchase made.

Monnie Applegate, marketing director of Manhattan Town Center, said the businesses at the mall will meet with representatives of Commerce Bank sometime after the first of July.

Many Manhattan merchants said they haven't heard about the program.

Jane Gelphman, manager of Musicland, and Sam Goody, said she didn't know anything about the program. Cheryl Sieben, director of Aggieville Business Association, hasn't heard of the program's details either. She said representatives of Commerce Bank are coming next Tuesday to present the program. The use of debit cards, similar to the proposed Wildcat Card, has increased. Students said they used debit cards offered by their banks and credit card compa-

Court ruling threatens settlement

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TRENTON, N.J. - Two weeks before thousands of AIDS-infected hemophiliacs were to begin getting $100,000 checks from makers of tainted blood-clotting products, a U.S. Supreme Court ruling Wednesday threw their class-action settlement into question. As some of the roughly 6,000 hemophiliacs panicked, their attorneys and those of the four manufacturers spent the day debating how the ruling affects their settlement and what steps to take next. hemophiliacs "We've lost our settlement! Oh, my God!" said Elaine DePrince, of Cherry Hill, who has buried two of her three AIDSinfected hemophiliac sons and just published a book blaming the tragedy on negligence by the manufacturers and federal health officials.

The attorneys, however, said the ruling didn't necessarily nullify the $700-million settlement, which still faces a handful of recent appeals.

In a 6-2 decision, the Court refused to revive a $1.3-billion settlement that would have resolved hundreds of thousands of injury claims against asbestos manufacturers. The court said that a trial judge lacked the authority to allow a class-action settlement in a lawsuit that would be denied class-action status at trial.

"The ruling establishes a tough, legal punch list for court approval of class-action settlements," said David Shrager, a Philadelphia lawyer heading the hemophiliacs' decade-long battle to be compensated for being infected with AIDS by products meant to allow their blood to clot normally.

Shrager said because the hemophiliaes are a much less diverse group than the asbestos-injury victims, the hemophilia settlement is more likely to hold up.

Malcom Shabazz's lawyer condemns prosecutors who could seek murder charge

YONKERS, N.Y. - A lawyer condemned prosecutors who could seek to bring a murder charge against 12year-old Malcolm Shabazz for allegedly setting the fire that killed his grandmoth-

The Family Court papers, which were filed before the widow of Malcolm X died Monday, could be upgraded to include a charge of murder. Even then, under juvenile law, Malcolm could be sentenced to no more than 18 months in detention or custody if convicted, although the sentence could be extended year by year until his 18th birthday.

The papers also disclosed that charges filed so far against Malcolm include the juvenile equivalents of attempted murder, attempted manslaughter, arson, assault and reckless endangerment.

After hearing oral arguments Tuesday by news organizations seeking to open the case to reporters, Judge Howard Spitz said he would issue a decision on July 2. He also scheduled a hearing July 8 on Malcolm's competence to participate in his own defense.

Betty Shabazz, who witnessed her husband's assassination in February 1965, succumbed to burns suffered in the June 1 blaze at her apartment just north of New York City. The medical examiner blamed multiple complications from third-degree burns covering 80 percent of her body. Authorities honored the family's request that no autopsy be performed.

Russian supply ship collides with space station Mir

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. - A Russian cargo ship crashed into the space station Mir Wednesday during a test, causing one module to lose pressure, NASA said. The three men on board, including a NASA astronaut, were reported to be safe.

The crew watched as the Progress ship, filled with garbage, moved toward the Mir and collided into a module during a test of the docking system, said NASA spokesman Rob Navias. A solar panel on the module was damaged, and pressure began to drop inside.

The crew hurriedly sealed off the module to prevent a further drop in pressure in the rest of the sprawling station.

The Progress, launched with crucial supplies and repair equipment in April, was supposed to redock this morning and then be jettisoned for good on Saturday.

This is not the first space collision, although it appears to be the worst ever for the 11-yearold Mir. Mir has experienced a series of trouble in recent months. Besides the fire and Progress redocking trouble, oxygen generators failed, the carbon dioxide-removal system malfunctioned, and the cooling system leaked harmful antifreeze.

Assistant city attorney turns assault case with possible felony charges back to county attorney

Two K-State basketball players, Manny Dies and Pero Vasiljevic, could face felony charges for allegedly threatening Collegian columnist

Todd Stewart in May. Bobby Almanza, Manhattan assistant city attorney, turned the case over to Riley County Attorney William E. Kennedy on Monday. This comes a little more than two weeks after Kennedy, who originally handled the case, turned it over to Almanza.

At the time, it appeared that Dies and Vasiljevic would not be charged with felonies. Kennedy said the level of the case determined which office would handle it. He said his office took care of felonies, while the city handled lesser offenses.

"In my opinion, it's up to the city," he said at After reviewing the case, Almanza sent it back to Kennedy at the county office.

"The allegations contained in the case are more of a serious nature than what the city attorney's office handles," Almanza said.

Almanza would not speculate on what, if any, charges would be filed. Kennedy did not offer a time when a decision could be reached. He said he will not rush the case, but will give it as much time as he deems necessary.

However, Kennedy said he would not send it back to Almanza again.

"The case will stay here," he said.

Stewart, junior in mass communications, told police that Dies and Vasiljevic entered his apartment on May 6. They were looking for him and making threatening comments, he said.

Stewart said he escaped through a secondstory window and ran to a neighbor's house for

COUNTRY STAMPEDE: THE SAFETY FACTOR

Planning may prevent problems at Stampede

JOHN HENDERSON

Before rushing off to the Country Stampede this weekend, students should remember to pack survival kits. Medical personnel like Larry Couchman will be there to assist if needed, but they'd rather not have to.

Couchman is director of emergency medical services for Mercy Health Center of Manhattan and coordinator of EMS and first aid for Stampede.

Couchman said he suggests a highlevel sunscreen.

"We had some terrific sunburns last year," he said. "Even if people are tanned well, they still need some form of sunscreen.

The weather forecast for Stampede has partly cloudy skies, with temperatures reaching into the 90s. There will be plenty of chances for sunburns, he said.

> Cathie Barry, director of nursing for Lafene Health Center, agreed. She said she recommends a waterproof sunscreen of SPF 15 or higher. Reapply it twice a day, she said. It makes sense to have sunblock for lips, too, she said. Also, remember to drink a lot of water, because there's a huge chance one might become dehydrated, she said.

Couchman said to wear light-colored clothing, preferably cotton. Black clothes trap heat, he said.

Barry said beer drinkers need to be aware that alcohol will dehydrate them. "Bring more water than beer," she

Dave Haefke, shift captain for the Riley County EMS, said people should drink water before they leave for the Stampede and remember that beer will make them need to use the restroom

"We would say to avoid alcohol altogether," he said, "but they're out to have a good time. Mary Knapp, climatologist with the K-State Extension Service, said that people should consider drinking only water in the heat of the day, and if they are going to drink alcohol, save it for the Electrolyte replacement drinks like Gatorade or Powerade make sense too. Couchman said.

"Stay away from soda pop," he said.

"I'd advise minimal to moderate alcohol consumption."

If Stamped attendees don't bring water, they need to bring plenty of cash,

"Bring an umbrella," Couchman said. "Between shows, you'll need to get in the shade. The vendor tents are good too. Go anywhere to get out of the sun."

Barry said to bring sunglasses because the glare off of water can damage eyesight. Cowboy hats or caps work well to keep the sun away from eyes, she

The bugs will bite, Couchman said. Near the campground is a freshly mowed hayfield, home to chiggers, he Barry said it's tick season, too. She said there are sunscreens that act as insect repellents, but people should check with their pharmacists for a repellent for all bugs.

Other medicines Barry said he recommends are a mixed-antibiotic ointment like Neosporin, 1-percent hydrocortisone cream, Tylenol or other analgesics, aloe-vera gel for severe burns, and an anti-diarrheal medicine. Store all medicines in a plastic bag, she said.

Bandages, Ace wraps and chemicalice bags for sprains are other musthaves, she said.

Unless you're bringing a refrigerator, it's probably not a good idea to bring food, Barry said. Egg-based food like mayonnaise or potato salad can cause food poisoning if left out in the heat, she said, as can meats.

"If you're going with a group, send the extra car to the store for food," she said. "Even if you have a cooler, you still have to be careful."

Couchman said to go easy on greasy snacks during Stampede. Light snacks, including fruit, will help keep people from dehydrating, he said.

Children are more susceptible to the heat, Barry said. Many parents forget to make their children wear hats to keep the un off, she said.

"Little kids can really get fried," she said. "They have to watch out for insect bites, too.'

Couchman said the first-aid station at Stampede will be at the north end of festival grounds, marked "J" on the map. He hopes to set up a secondary unit at the south end and one at the campgrounds.

Preparation continues at concert grounds

Country Stampede may start Friday, but preliminary preparation has been going on

Gil Cunningham, vice-president of Don Romeo Agency, which produces and contracts out the acts for Stampede, said preparation for the event began a few days earlier

"Everything is right on schedule. We are in real good shape," he said.

He said he hopes last-minute changes can be handled if the weather is nice.

"If the weather cooperates, the set-up may be done a day ahead of schedule," he said. He said the Manhattan management team is the best they have worked with.

"We do nine of these shows a year, and the team of management from Manhattan is the best," he said. "It is going much

He said the Manhattan community has been especially helpful.

"Without the people of Manhattan, we would not be able to do this," he said. "We owe them so much.

Liz Cunningham, director of marketing for the agency, said it has helped that workers are experienced this year.

"I'm not as worried this year as I was last year, because people seemed to know that they are doing this time around," she said

She said most employees from Manhattan did not know how to prepare for an event of this size last year.

"We got set back a day or two last year, but, this year we are right on time because the people are so dependable and hard-working,"

Chad Romano, junior in pre-psychology, said he has enjoyed preparing for the event. "It has been a great time to get out in the sun and earn some extra dollars," he said.

"WE GOT SET BACK A DAY OR TWO LAST YEAR, BUT THIS YEAR WE ARE RIGHT ON TIME BECAUSE THE PEOPLE ARE SO DEPENDABLE AND HARD-WORKING."

Guy Esnouf, spokesman for the four manufacturers - Bayer, Alpha Therapeutic Corp., Baxter International Inc. and Rhone-Poulenc Rorer Inc. — said the companies remained committed to the settlement.

News of the ruling triggered a deluge of calls to lawyers and advocacy groups for hemophiliacs.

"This community has been bounced around like a yo-yo with hopes raised and hopes dashed," said Jan Hamilton, president of the Hemophilia Federation Inc. in Washington

In January 1996, the 7th Circuit Court of Appeals disbanded the original hemophilia class action suit.

But the manufacturers decided to pursue the settlement, which would separately reimburse the hemophiliacs' lawyers and private and government insurance programs that had paid for costly medical treatment. The first checks are supposed to be mailed July 8, Esnouf said.

Don't let Country Stampede crush your common sense in situations uring an event such as Country Stampede, which has been called "Woodstock on the Prairie," anything could happen - even in our backyard.

The sheer number of country music fans inundating the area combined with a three day ongoing concert environment calls for an extra ounce of prevention.

Protecting yourself against physical harm, criminal victimization or dangerous situations begins with common sense. The ability to have a good time should be balanced with safety and respect for others attending the concerts.

Heat and fatigue can compound the possibility of problems, especially when a large number of strangers are crammed into one area. Be aware of your surroundings and travel with people you trust even during the day. Isolating yourself from the crowd increases the possibility for your safety to be compromised.

Stampede, responsibility and advanced planning pay off in the long run. Use your head. Increased exposure to the sun and physical activity means additional water intake

Overnight camping and roughing it shouldn't mean being cut off from the outside world. Be aware of the weather situation and have an evacuation or safety plan in case of tornadoes, If anything can be learned from the first hail or severe thunderstorms and lightning

If the forecast is sunny, protect your skin against sunburns or other skin irritations with insect repellent and sunscreen

Protect your belongings by keeping them locked in a secure place or bringing only essential items to the concert. It's important to locate security and emergency personnel early in the day in case such services are needed

Remember, responsibility and respect for others is the best way to ensure everyone has a ► ED BOARD behalf of the queers of America, I would like to thank the Southern Baptists who recently agreed to boycott Walt Disney Co.

In case you didn't hear, the Southern Baptist Convention overwhelmingly approved a boycott of Walt Disney Co. and its related entities June 18.

Apparently they object to Disney's policy of granting health benefits to the domestic partners of homosexual employees. Southern Baptists also have a problem with "Gay Days" at Disney theme parks. And I guess they weren't big fans of "Pulp Fiction," which was released by one of Disney's film subsidiaries.

We, the homosexuals, bisexuals, lesbians, our friends and families (who way out number the Southern Baptists' 15.7 million members), are ecstatic the lines will be shorter to get into see "Hercules" this

We are overjoyed to be able to rent "Pulp Fiction" when ever we'd like to. We can't wait to shop at the Disney Store now that the crowds have subsided.

We really didn't want the Southern Baptists at Disney World Resort during 'Gay Days" anyway.

But as overjoyed as I am, I want to make sure all of you who are Southern Baptist understand the scope of your boycott.

I'm all for boycotting companies whose policies you don't agree with. There are a few businesses here in town I don't frequent because of their expressed beliefs. 1 live without patronizing a particular Aggieville restaurant, but you've got to really hate something to boycott the Disney Come on. Disney owns a lot.

A helluva lot.

Here's the list the Associated Press had of the stuff Disney owns. It's not everything Disney owns but here goes: Disneyland; Disney World Resort; the Disney Store; Walt Disney Pictures; Touchstone Pictures; Hollywood Pictures; Caravan Pictures; Miramax (another film company); ABC television (a small company - maybe you've heard of it); the Disney Channel; ESPN Inc.; A&E television; Lifetime television; the Mighty Ducks (a hockey team); Anaheim Angels; Hollywood Records; and Discover magazine.

So I guess if you are Southern Baptist, you won't be watching much cable. You won't be watching any football or any other sport for that matter. Monday Night Football is on ABC television, you know, and ESPN is on the list of no-nos.

If you really want to stop supporting Disney, there are a few other companies you should refrain from patronizing also. McDonald's Restaurant, for instance. Right now McDonald's is selling Happy Meals with toys from "Hercules," a Disney movie. Going to bake those chocolate chip cookies? Not with Nestle Toll House chocolate chips, you're not. Nestle has a special candy bar out with "Hercules" characters on it. They're really cool candy bars, with part white chocolate and part milk

Don't forget Minute Maid juice. Under the lid of specially marked frozen juice containers you can play "Remember the Magic" trivia in celebration of the 25th anniversary of Walt Disney World.

If the Southern Baptists, or anyone else for that matter, wants to boycott a business that supports the queer community in one way or another, there are a few more you should know about.

American Airlines is the official airline for gay events across the country.

IBM offers those domestic partner benefits and places employment recruitment advertising in the Advocate, the national gay and lesbian magazine.

Miller Beer also advertises in the Disney?

Advocate with slogans such as "The pride starts inside" printed in large rainbow colored letters.

Visa offers the Rainbow card. It's a credit card that donates money to the Rainbow Endowment.

The endowment gives money to lesbian and gay health, arts, cultural and civil rights organizations.

Subaru was the founding sponsor of the Rainbow Endowment.

Over the ages queers have had to be very forgiving people. We have tolerated hatred and bigotry for years. Finally we figured out the way to equality, through the dollar. Just as the Southern Baptist can choose to boycott such business, we choose to support them.

We do support business who believe in equality for all people, and I encourage you too also.

Besides, can you really live without

This is worse - and much so than those who say the wrong thing. In saying the wrong thing, we know someone cares - even if what is said adds no salve to our wound.

To say nothing at all is to dip the freshly opened wound into the salted water of your silence.

Is there a solution then, for the good and terrible problem of our grief?

Some would say the solution is to be found in solitude. Others would suggest immersion in friends, family or another pleasant diversion. Still others suggest helping people of

Some would suggest writing about it.

All of these, I would contend, can be extremely cathartic, if not totally healing. Some wounds never go away. They simply scar.

Jesus - a man described in the Old Testament as a "man of sorrow" - dealt with grief in many varying ways.

When his friend and cousin John died, Jesus immediately "left in a boat, and went to a place where he could be alone" (Matthew 14:13a). It appears that in his grief, Jesus did not wish to be around even the people whom he loved so much - much like you and I.

But it is in his reaction to the death of his friend Lazarus that we see just how much Jesus is like you and I. John 11:35 sums up Jesus' feelings with two words.

"Jesus cried." He cried - just like you and I. In doing so, it is as if he gives us permission to hurt - to feel wave after wave of pain, until you would drown in your own tears. John does not indicate the duration of Jesus' cry. However, from the context we can gather that it was not a brief shedding of This was not just any man. This was his best friend. This was a man who was most likely as a brother to Jesus. I personally believe that Jesus wept hot tears of sadness and pain, not merely tears of compassion.

He knew that though he was about to call his friend out of the tomb, Lazarus would die again. I think that this made him sad. I know that it would make me so. "Jesus cried."

By doing so, he gives us permission to weep our own bitter tears of loneliness, betrayal and raw, unadulterated pain.

He gives us permission to grieve. But Jesus did not leave those who would comfort others without help in their own time of need. Also in John 11, Jesus is shown dealing with the sisters of Lazarus - both of whom he cared about very much. Speaking of Mary, John 11:33 says, "When Jesus saw her crying, and the Jews who were crying with her, he was deeply moved and troubled."

He then went on to ask just the most basic question, "Where did you put Lazarus?"(v. 34)

Jesus understood. In fact reading between the lines of verses 34 and 35, I can see Jesus kissing Mary gently on the cheek and hugging her tenderly to his side. You see, he understood that in their time of need, a person does not want to hear eloquent words on the necessity of pain and suffer-in grieving, but in compassion for the grieving.

They want your ear. They want your hugs. They do not want your comforting words. We would do well to follow his kind example, not only

Tips for surviving Country Stampede weather

The forecast for the Country Stampede is hot and sunny, with less than a 50-percent chance of thunder-

Last year a thunderstorm passed 20 miles north of the festival grounds, and the area was under tornado watch for one day, according to the Weather Data Library, part of the K-State Department of Communications.

The forecast was hot and sunny last year too, with a 30-percent chance for thunderstorms, said Mary Knapp, state climatologist with the Kansas State University Extension Service.

"It's typical June weather," said Mike Akulow, warning coordination meteorologist with the National Weather Service. "Storms can develop very fast this time of

A tornado was sighted near Fort Riley during the weekend of last year's Stampede, he said. Three tornado warnings in addition to the watch were issued for Riley County, he

"People need to be alert to changing conditions in the weather," Knapp said. "If it looks like thunderstorms are developing, you might not want to go."

Lightning kills more people than tornadoes, and thunderstorms are more likely to occur, she said. The danger is greatest near the stage with all the electronic equipment, she said.

Festival attendees should keep watch on the skies and consider leaving at the first sign of a storm, she

Liz Cunningham, director of marketing for Stampede, said an evacuation plan is in place, but the emergency director couldn't be reached for details.

Knapp said an evacuation of the festival grounds wouldn't be very feasible. The Tuttle Pond area is surrounded by hills with only two two-lane roads leading Twenty thousand attended Stampede last year, she said. That number isn't as high as some concert numbers, but it's large enough to make an evacuation very difficult, she said

"It's not as bad as Sandstone, which might have 75,000 or so," she said. "But people wouldn't do very well to drive out of a storm if there are 20,000 other people trying to do the same thing. It'd be better to just stay put."

people decide to leave all at once there would be the traffic congestion and the possibility of accidents, she

"Anything that would warrant an evacuation would come so rapidly, you couldn't get everyone out," she

People should keep a plan in mind in case of a weather emergency, Knapp said. The most dangerous period is in the early afternoon to mid-evening, she

"If something does develop, don't panic, that's not going to help you any," she said. "Plan ahead and be aware of the conditions.'

In the event of a thunderstorm, a car is one of the safest places to be, she said. The problem is that people watching the concert might have trouble getting to the parking lot, she said.

Tornadoes are unlikely, she said. "If a watch is called, that's all it is, a watch," Knapp said. "It just means the conditions are good for a tor-

If a tornado is sighted, it's not a good idea to get in a car, she said. Get to low-lying areas like the ditches along the highways, she said. Restrooms can also be safe, though 20,000 people won't fit into restrooms,

"Your best bet is to get down to the ground, cover your heads, and pray to whatever gods you believe in,"

There isn't much of a chance of either a tornado or thunderstorm now, she said. It looks like mostly sunny skies are in store for Tuttle Creek Dam with little if any precipitation, she said.

Phillip Bills, forecaster for the National Weather Service, said there was less chance of rain than he originally thought.

'We may end up going with just a dry forecast," he

Topeka city council votes to appeal judge's order on church-picketing guidelines

TOPEKA - The capital city plans to appeal a district judge's ruling that invalidated part of an ordinance designed to limit picketing outside churches.

The 1995 ordinance was a response to the activities of the Rev. Fred Phelps Sr. and his Westboro Baptist Church. About 5,000 Topeka residents signed petitions seeking such an ordinance.

Phelps and his church are best known for their public campaign against homosexuality. Westboro Baptist members often picket other churches because they believe those churches do not condemn the sodomite agenda enough. Critics have accused Phelps' followers of using profane language and verbally abusing churchgoers, something they deny.

In voting Tuesday night to appeal, the Topeka City Council cited two major objections to the ruling by Shawnee County District Judge Franklin Theis Jr.

Theis invalidated a provision of the ordinance that required pickets to remain 90 feet away from a church entrance. Theis said such a limitation too severely restricted pickets' rights and said 50 feet is a reasonable Theis also ruled that churches must publish the beginning and ending times of their services in a local newspaper, not just post them on a sign. The ordinance prohibits picketing during a service.

The council's vote to appeal was 6-3. Some members who voted in favor of the appeal have misgivings about pursuing the case but said their constituents demanded it. "The people want a clear-cut answer," said council member Jim Gardner. Opponents worry that if the city loses its appeal, it will face paying large legal bills to the Phelps Chartered law firm, which is handling the case for Westboro Baptist. Most of Phelps' 13 children are practicing attor-

They noted that Theis already has ordered the city to pay nearly $40,000 in legal fees to the Phelps firm.

Margie Phelps, a daughter of the senior Phelps and an attorney, said the church will take the case to the U.S. Supreme Court if necessary.

She noted that Westboro Baptist was comfortable with an ordinance requiring pickets to remain 50 feet from a church. But if the city pursues an appeal of Theis' ruling. she said, the church may attempt to get even the shorter distance declared too restrictive.

Last year about 60 people stayed on campus during Stampede weekend. Schlee said many of them were people who set up exhibits at the festival.

He said he doesn't expect as many this year, because people haven't been making

Youth basketball camp stresses shooting, fundamentals to players

BRANDON ROMBERGER

This was the second year Lucas Carpenter had been to Asbury Basketball Camp because he wanted to know how to pass and dribble correctly. He was just one of the 44 campers who made their way to Ahearn for the two-day camp this weekend.

Carpenter, a grade-school student with dreams of a professional basketball career, said he liked the camp because the coaches helped

They are nice, they take and consider what you ask them. They are funny, and they know what they are talking about," he said. "The most important thing they taught me was how to shoot correctly."

This was the second shooting camp put on this summer by Tom Asbury and his staff. Campers paid $95 and received a t-shirt, two lunches and a sports bottle.

The campers were also given an instructional video by Damon Lopez, the shot doctor, who teaches correct shooting skills. They were videotaped five different times during the camp. They were taped shooting before the camp and at the end to see the progress in "This gives the parents something, to show them how much their child has progressed at the camp," Brent Bargen, academic counselor for men's basketball, said.

The campers went through shooting drills, ball handling, freethrow shooting and games of knockout. They also watched video tapes stressing different techniques and fundamentals. Members of the basketball staff also demonstrated.

Bargen said the two-day shooting camp was a relatively new idea. The main idea was to show kids how to shoot properly.

"We try to improve their ability and give the kids who don't know how to pass and dribble correctly the chance," he said.

Tom Asbury, K-State men's basketball coach, said he likes the camps. He said the footwork and techniques of young players are important. He said too many kids shoot the ball wrong and the staff spends the time to show them the right way.

He said lack of fundamentals hurts many of the players today. "Players today are deficient in all skills. They don't spend enough time practicing. In our camp, we work on all the skills," Asbury said.

"We try to catch the bad habits of young players before they get older and can't be corrected," Asbury said he has received positive feedback from the camp participants and their parents. He said the parents and kids loved it. He said there was a high rate of return. "We work really hard for two days, and it comes out good for the kids and their parents," Asbury said. Art Roberts brought his son to the shooting camp for the first time this year. Roberts said it was good experience for his son.

"I liked the fact that it was a two-day camp," he said. "Besides, we like to come to Manhattan anyway."

Roberts said the most important thing he thought his son could learn was fundamentals. "Hopefully he can learn to be coachable: A lot of the time kids have trouble with that," Roberts said. "He can learn to listen and not develop bad habits." The campers, parents and coaches are not the only ones who have fun at the camp. Duane Davis, a guard on the K-State basketball team, enjoys working with the kids.

"I get satisfaction helping the kids. They're young, and they have a lot of time to become a good player," he said

He said the kids enjoy people showing an interest in them. The Tyson seeks redemtion against Holyfield

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAS VEGAS - The Sound introduced the Fury on Wednesday. And in doing so, promoter Don King invoked the spirits of Ernest Hemingway and William Faulkner during the final news conference for the Evander

Holyfield-Mike Tyson "The Sound and the Fury" rematch. The two men expected to provide the fury Saturday night addressed the crowd for a combined 94 seconds, then answered questions for about 20 minutes of the 90-minute session at the MGM Grand. Tyson, whose opening remarks lasted 12 seconds, drew laughter when asked if he made a mistake in his 11th-round loss to Holyfield on Nov. 9 - and if so, what he will do to correct it. "Sure, I lost the first fight," Tyson said. "We'll correct it by winning.

King, who spent 67 minutes on introductions and observations before finally introducing the two principals, Tyson first, said he got the idea of "The Sound and Fury" tag for the WBA heavyweight title fight from "Ernie and Bill."

"Me and my spirituality, I thought I'd call on Ernest Hemingway," King said. "So I called up

There was a murmuring in the audience because it was Faulkner, not Hemingway, who wrote "The Sound and The Fury.' Suddenly, King said Hemingway told him, "Let me plug in Bill Faulkner, and Faulkner said, 'I think I have just what you need, Don and Ernie. Let's call it 'The Sound and the Fury."

Tyson and Holyfield both predicted victory, but the respective camps were respectful of each other.

The only real fireworks came from Andrea Deshong and Christy Martin, who are scheduled to fight 10 2-minute rounds on the undercard of the pay-per-view card in the MGM Grand Garden.

Deshong, who has split two fights with the much better-known Martin, told the audience she was going to show her opponent a bag

"Andrea does have a nice dress on," Martin said. "It's the first time I've ever seen her dress respectably and look like a woman.

The two then traded insults, as Holyfield laughed and Tyson shook his head.

The women's bout will be part of the live telecast.

A 10-round super lightweight bout featuring Mexicans Julio Cesar Chavez, a former champion in three weight classes, and Miguel Angel Gonzalez, a former WBC lightweight champion will also be part of the telecast.

Lonnie Bradley will defend the WBO middleweight championship against John Williams in a fight that will be taped for possible showing on pay-per-view.

After introducing Gonzalez, King said, "Is his opponent here? He's not here? What's his name? Oh, he's here.

Bert Roberto Granciosa then went to the microphone and said, "I do my best. Thank you."

Tuttle creek offers festival goers options on weekend of Country Stampede

If you're looking for recreational activities to participate in while attending Country Stampede this weekend, Tuttle Creek Lake and its surrounding parks have a lot to offer.

"There's plenty to do," said Greg Wurst, a natural resources specialist for the Tuttle Creek Lake Corps of Engineers. "Absolutely. No doubt about it."

Activities include fishing, jet skiing, boating, horseback riding, camping, hiking and hunting. Some activities will be limited, but most will be the same as other weekends Fishing will be allowed, except in River Pond State Park tomorrow through Sunday.

"We don't want any accidents," Gary Simnitt, River Pond Maintenance Supervisor said. "There's going to be many gallons of beer out there. People are going to get drunk and want to go fishing, and we don't anybody drowning." While the closing may be an inconvenience, River Pond Park Manager Bill Porter said it's probably not a big deal.

"I haven't seen more than three boats out there in the past five days," he said. "The fishing hasn't been very good late-

Also, the picnic areas in River Pond area will not be available to the general public as they normally are, because the Country Stampede is using that space.

But various activities are available in the surrounding parks.

The motorcycle area near the spillway is open for off-road enthusiasts. Hikers, mountain-bikers and horseback riders can take to Carnahan Creek Park, located on the opposite side of the lake from Stockdale Park, where a special trail is located.

Hiking is also allowed in all undeveloped areas surrounding Tuttle Creek Lake, as is hunting.

Another area for water sports is Spillway State Park, near the southeast corner of the lake. There you can jet ski or go out boating. If you don't have your own watercraft, there are rental options available. But be prepared for crowds.

"It's one of our busiest weekends of the year," said Keith Eyestone, owner of Big Dawg Marina at Spillway State Park. "Last year was the first year of Country Stampede, and we noticed a big difference in our sales. We're hoping for a lot of people again this year."

Before you complain at a baseball game learn the rules

Over the past seven years, I have umpired many baseball games for kids ranging in age from 6 to 18 years old. Over that time, I have witnessed parents and coaches who think they knew the rules. So in this, the year that major-league umpires are taking a stand and claiming they will not put up with anything, I am going to take a stand and say that there are a lot of misguided people out there.

On the most part, there are many decent parents who just want their kids to have fun. But there are also those parents who think that they know the rules, and can see a play, better

Well. I have news for you - you can't.

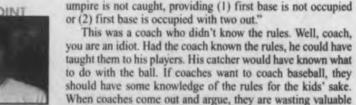

There are always parents in the stands who think that even though the umpire is five feet from the base, and they are in the stands, they can somehow see the play better than you. If that were the case, I would be sitting up in the stands drinking an ice-cold beverage and making the calls from there.

I have played baseball for years, been a fan of baseball for years and even have coached baseball. I understand players and coaches get upset when a call doesn't go their way, but that is something you have to live with. There are parents out there who believe that their kid's game is more important than the seventh game of the World Series.

And as an umpire, I can understand how fans and participants get upset when they don't get a call, but the worst thing is when there are coaches and parents who don't know the rules, but think that they do.

Just a few weeks ago, I was working a game between 13and 14-year-olds, and there was a coach who couldn't believe we allowed a batter to run on a dropped third strike when there was a runner on first base. He would have been correct, but there were two outs and as written in the official baseball rule book under section 6.09.b, "THE BATTER BECOMES A BASE RUNNER WHEN ... (b) The third strike called by an on the other team too?" Well, the answer to that is simple. Their pitcher did not commit a balk. This is not just something that I call arbitrarily because I don't like the pitcher. If he is not pitching properly, I

Another comment that seems to always drift from the stands is "Tie goes to the runner." Nowhere in the baseball rule book does it state this phrase. Section 7.00 is dedicated solely game time by pointlessly arguing their incorrect knowledge of plaining, thinking I was unfair because I kept calling balks on one pitcher. I kept hearing "Hey ump, why don't you call them

I have also umpired games where the parents were comto the runner, and I have never found this phrase in that section. It is up to the umpire to make a call as to whether on a force play, the ball reached the base before the runner. The umpire doesn't stand there and try to decide if it was a tie. They make a quick decision on the play.

People just need to know the rules. Baseball is a complicated sport, and if you have ever seen the official baseball rule book, you know that it is in small print and very complicated. Most umpires know the rules, and over the past seven years I have come to the conclusion that most parents don't know the rules - although they think they do. They just need to remember that the games, especially the youth games, are there for the kids to have fun and learn about baseball. It's not game seven of the World Series. That is why there are time limits and run rules for the youth baseball leagues. If parents don't let the kids have fun and teach them the proper rules, the kids won't enjoy the great game of base-

Interpretation of light and mirror images reflect the vision of a print-making artist on exhibit at the Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art.

"I really don't think backward or in reverse," Dan Kirchhefer, artist and professor, said when asked about how he sees things. "I draw all my original studies the way I see or interpret them.'

Kirchhefer, a printmaker, is the 1997 Gift Print Artist for Friends of the Beach Museum of Art. A collection of his prints is on display through July 13 in the Wefald Gallery at the museum in

6:30 to 8 p.m. Originally from Hastings, Neb., he is a professor at Emporia State University and teaches drawing, printmaking and art history. He changed his major from pre-law to art in college after taking an art history course. His love is printmaking. "I like it because I can manipulate as I go along," Kirchhefer said. "I can make changes and adjustments. I like the idea that I can work back into the print. ' His prints can be found throughout the country in group and one-person exhibitions. Collections such as the Print Collection at the New York Public Library contain his works. "A print is a mirror image of what is made on the plate,"

Kathrine Walker, education coordinator at the museum, said. "The purpose is to create original artwork that you can reproduce in multiples."

There are three basic ways to make a print. Most of Kirchhefer's prints utilize the intaglio method, engraving or etching on wood or metal. Kirchhefer's favorite material for engraving is copper and zinc.

After the plate is inked, the surface is wiped, and ink is left in the depressions. Paper is forced into the depressions, and ink is transferred to the paper's surface.

Once the print is made, Kirchhefer begins adding his unique ors. He also uses tinting techniques to add a variety of effects. His gift print, "South of Cottonwood Falls," involves hand coloring with 13 watercolors.

"The Flint Hills are indeed growing on me," Kirchhefer said. "I find them quite beautiful when the light changes."

He captures varying degrees of light on flint rock observed at different times throughout a 24-hour period.

A gift print is one the artist donates to Friends of the Beach Museum of Art. Kirchhefer has finished 56 of the 100 donated prints. Each one must be hand colored individually. "It is really a major donation on their part," Walker said of Ultimate Fake Book signs recording contract, readies for album release to wow Manhattan in mid-September

AARON BRUNHARDT

Ultimate Fake Book has recently been given a contract and is releasing a new album due the second week of September. Having the date in time for everyone to come back to college was no coincidence.

"We carefully planned this out," said Eric Melin, the drummer for Ultimate Fake Book. This date is also around the same time of the annual Welcome Back Concert held in the Melin has also been known as the drummer for his previous band, Truck Stop Love. Truck Stop Love broke up after the band released the album "How I Spent My Summer Vacation

"The older we got, the more complicated things became," said Melin. Ultimate Fake Book picked up Melin last November, and making music is fun again, said Melin. Before Ultimate Fake Book grabbed Melin, they had been together over three years. They had another vocalist before Bill McShane decided to sing and still play guitar. They also have been through two drummers before Melin. Nick Colby has played the bass guitar all this time for Ultimate Fake Book . Before, there were four members to the band. Now, it's a trio.

Of the 10 songs on Ultimate Fake Book's new album, "Electric Kissing Parties," five of the songs were done with a former drummer. The band decided that they would rather spend the money used on the recordings wisely by putting them on "Electric Kissing Parties," said Melin.

The other five songs are recent recordings using Melin as the drummer.

Santana delivers groove rock with level few still can attain

SANTANA, RUSTED ROOT LIVE CONCERT AT SANDSTONE

NATE JENKINS

It's tough not to feel sorry for the glut of 1970s guitar rock bands trying to recapture their piece of rock 'n' roll heaven. The slow, cosmic swagger and piercing vocals of Robert Plant are a thing of the past. Carlos Santana is one of the few musicians who peaked at that period who has retained the delicate balance between style and substance. Playing in front of a surprisingly small crowd at Sandstone Ampitheatre Tuesday night, he proved it once again.

Rusted Root opened the concert for Santana and played straight-ahead groove-oriented rock with touches of rockabilly and country thrown in for good measure.

Santana must of been attracted to their percussion section when picking an opening act, because they certainly have a strong one. Two drummers were banging away for the hour they were on stage, and they ended their set with a five person percussion jam.

The Root also joined Santana and company on stage at the beginning of his set to help out with a medley of Bob Marley tunes including "Exodus" and "Get Up, Stand Up."

Santana describes his music as a baby made of the blues and Afro-Cuban rhythms, and the description is right. Standing in front of a massive percussion section that featured up to four drummers, Santana deftly weaved in and out of Latin-flavored rhythms that kept most of the lawn section on their feet for the entire show.

At times Santana played within the band's framework almost to a fault, exposing himself in short glimpses, and then returning to the tight mesh of the percussion section, when it seemed he might ride one of his long notes into a jam and take the band into another direction.

But he picked his spots well. Slowing the pace down halfway through the show, he played a slower blues style that showed the true strength of his guitar playing. Nobody can juice one note like Santana. He seemed to be able literally - to lift a single tone into the air and make it rise higher and higher, long after his pick hit the string of the guitar, until it reached an unknown point in the evening sky. His classic song "Oye Como Va" was particularly strong, the apex of his jam driving Northeast Kansas' finest assortment of quasi-hippies into a near frenzy on the lawn section.

Santana ended the show with a twenty minute version of "Black Magic Woman" that included an interlude of Marvin Gaye's "I Want You." It doesn't sound like that combination would work, but the dynamism of Santana combined with his ability to take his band wherever he wants to musically, made it sound great.

Santana showed how he has distanced himself from the other old timers still out there today, and the intense look on his face as he played told the story. After countless live shows since the mid 1960s and 30 albums, he still needs to play. Let's hope he keeps doing it.

Summer sun could lead to heat stroke at Country Stampede

With weekend temperatures that might reach into the nineties, the chances of heat stroke and heat exhaustion will be greater for the thousands of fans expected to attend Country Stampede.

Heat exhaustion and heat stroke can be serious medical problems, said Cindy Burke, registered nurse and director of health education and promotion at Lafene Health Center.

"A heat stroke is when you may actually have over exposure to the sun, and heat exhaustion will come when they are over-exerting in the sun," she said.

The symptoms of heat exhaustion are pale facial coloration, cold or clammy skin, heavy perspiration, nau-

"Heat stroke is actually much more serious than heat exhaustion. Heat stroke is what kills," Lt. Stephen Moyer, Riley County Emergency Services, said

High-school competition features advanced technology

Ten high-school teams met at the Bramlage Coliseum parking lot Tuesday morning to race their battery-powered cars in the first Kansas Electro-Rally.

The race, called an electrathon, a test of endurance, not speed. The teams had to design and build cars that could run off 64 pounds of lead/acid batteries for one hour. The team that completes the most laps around a quarter-mile course is the winner.

Jeff Simpson, of SunLectric Corporation, organized the event. This is the first time such a race has been held in Kansas. Simpson drives a converted Porsche 914 that runs on batteries. He also races battery and solar-powered

The race is designed to promote awareness of electric vehicles because they are going to become a reality in the very near future, Simpson said.

This is the generation that will be driving these cars," he said.

The teams had to design vehicles that met a series of safety, mechanical and electrical restrictions. The cars had to have seatbelts, a roll cage and brakes. Drivers also have to be able to shut down and exit the car in less than 20 seconds in case of an emergency or wreck on the course.

There were no cost restrictions and many of the teams found hometown sponsors to help finance their projects. Some of the cars cost more than $1,500 to build.

The car that wins must be efficient and conserve energy. High speed and acceleration drain the batteries faster, and the car will run out of power before the race is over, Simpson

The students quickly saw the results of their work. After 30 minutes of driving, 3 teams had already fallen out of the race due to electrical problems. At the 45-minute mark, only 5 teams were left. The race winner was Paola High School, which completed 97 laps. It was followed by Bonner Springs High School with 91 laps.

"It ran pretty good. I think I had one more lap in it," Clint Haley, the Paola Driver said.

This is K-State's first year to build a car for the Sunrayce. To qualify, they had to drive to Arizona. Then, because they made some minor changes to the car, they had to requalify at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway.

Wanda McVey of Manhattan has watched the team members work on Solution this spring.

"This is just incredible," McVey said. "I saw the Sunrayce go through here two years ago, and I was intrigued when I heard they were going to build a car for this year's race. I told them I wanted to touch base with them and watch them build this car. The effort they put into this is unbelievable."

Jason Northup, one of K-State's four drivers, joined the team and was involved primarily with the construction of Solution.

'We started construction during Christmas break and worked 40-50 hours a week towards the end of the semester," he Northup said it doesn't get too hot in the car for the driver, except when the car stops. Most of the vehicles have a hole for air to enter the car or a fan to cool the driver. K-State's Solution cost about $35,000, $10,000 of which went into the solar panels. K-State's College of Engineering helped the team raise money and get sponsors to help pay for the cost of construction.

Texas A&M also had an entry in Sunrayce '97. Their vehicle came in third Tuesday, with a time of 4 hours, 17 minutes and 35 seconds. The basic mechanics of their vehicle, the second entry in the Sunrayce from their school, is somewhat similar to K-State's.

The solar vehicles are run by batteries, which are charged through the solar arrays, or solar panels. The solar arrays consist of smaller solar cells, which contain silicon crystals, silver and a metal-coating that helps attract the light to the panels.

The energy collected by the panels is transferred to the batteries, which are lead batteries like in a regular car but contain gel. The batteries then provide energy to motors, many of which are connected directly to the wheels.

"On a good day, our car can run 35 mph without the battery," Brennan Dobbs, mechanical and technological engineer from Texas A&M, said. "Our car has got up above 65 mph, but averaged around 39 mph today."

The Texas A&M car took one-and-ahalf years to build, with one year for design and layout and six months for construc-

"A&M's '95 team took 27th overall," Tim Uno, mechanical engineer from Texas A&M, said. "We basically started from scratch on this car. We used the '95 entry to learn what not to do."

Donna Miller of Manhattan went to Bramlage Coliseum to see the vehicles.

"It was interesting, but there are a lot of bugs to work out before the general public would use them," Miller said.

Eric Shumaker, mechanical engineer from K-State and electric group leader, said he thinks solar power does have a future in transportation.

"I don't think solar-powered cars will be popular, but there could be solar-powered charging stations for electric cars," he said.

gift print artists. "They usually have a K-State or Kansas tie." The exhibition of his prints in Wefald Gallery represent various stages in his artistic career. Several prints include palm trees. Kirchhefer says this image goes back to his childhood. "I saw one in 1959 on a trip to California to visit my grandfather," he said. "It was so unusual."

His first palm tree emerged in 1980. "Because they are so unique, they had a tremendous impact me," Kirchhefer said.

Many of his works deal with the human condition. The exhibition includes: "Untitled," "Self Portrait," 'Three Palms," "Me," and four from the seven deadly sins, "Gluttony," "Chastity," "Lust" and "Pride."

Kirchhefer said he makes prints in his spare time. "I try to put in three-to five-hours per day with my art," he said. CREDIT his Visa Check Card all of the time. "I would be lost without it. I use it instead of writing checks," he said.

Rob Hayes, manager of Dutch Maid Supermarket Store, said a lot of people use debit cards at his grocery store. He said people like the idea of not having to keep track of or write checks.

Although he had not heard of the new Wildcat-card program, Hayes said he was eager to find out more about it. Commerce Bank will provide several benefits to participating merchants. The card can eliminate bad checks, make automatic deposits electronically to the merchant's bank and allow the business to use other credit cards on the machine. There is no deadline for businesses to enroll in the program.

Some business owners said they didn't need all of the services that Commerce offered for businesses.

Ballard and business owners said they didn't have a problem with bad checks.

SURVIVAL

He oversees a multi tiered response system at the Stampede, he said. Paramedics and EMTs from the Riley County EMS will be on hand with Red Cross volunteers and a nursing corps from Mercy Health Center, he said. However, Mercy Health Center on College Avenue is the only medical center offering emergency care.

He said less than five percent of the 20,000 people from last year's Stampede needed to visit the first-aid stations. Most of the serious cases were caused by dehydration, he said.

Army allowed known suspect to work in arms room

ASSOCIATED PRESS

RALEIGH, N.C. — The Army knew one of its soldiers was suspected of criminal activity before he killed a black couple, although it has repeatedly said it had little or no knowledge of the allegations, CBS News reported.

The Army was informed by the FBI that the Fort Bragg soldier had threatened to blow up the police chief in his hometown. Yet the Army allowed the soldier, James Burmeister, to work in an arms room in the months before he killed a black couple as a skinhead rite of initiation, CBS says in a report to be broadcast Thursday on " 48 Hours."

the state of the state of the state of Burmeister's commanding officer, Capt. Vincent Baker, who has since resigned, said the FBI assured him it was not necessary to restrict Burmeister from working in the arms room.

But the victims' families are asking why the Army and FBI didn't stop Burmeister before he committed murder.

" It's hard for me to understand what (the authorities) were waiting for, unless they were waiting for someone to die," Alan Rogers, a lawyer for the families,

Burmeister and fellow soldier Malcolm Wright were convicted of murder and sentenced to life in prison earli-

Joanne Morley, an FBI spokeswoman in Charlotte, told The Associated Press that the Army was told Burmeister was being investigated for an alleged criminal conspiracy in the months before the December 1995 murders.

She said it regarded " a lead out of our Philadelphia office," which presumably would have been about Burmeister's alleged threat against the police chief, although Morley did not

" It was an allegation of criminal conspiracy. It had nothing to do with racial bias or prejudice," Morley said. " The information that we had the military was made aware of, and it was no relation to the subsequent actions of Mr. Burmeister."

She said agents did not find sufficient evidence to prosecute Burmeister. Army officials have said repeatedly they had little or no knowledge of criminal activities by Burmeister or other skinheads at Fort Bragg prior to the murders. Reports that the FBI and Army may have been aware that Burmeister was capable of criminal conduct surfaced last year.

In 1996, Esquire magazine and other publications reported that the FBI and Army were aware that Burmeister was "a budding terrorist." Esquire reported that Burmeister told a friend that he was planning to blow up a synagogue.

The murders sparked an Army-wide investigation into extremists in the ranks. Army officials admitted they missed signs of white supremacist activity but concluded the number of extremists in the ranks was small.

About two dozen soldiers at Fort Bragg were forced out of the Army because of their affiliation with skinhead groups.

Costeau, 87, dies at home

PARIS - He shared his undersea adventures with millions of TV viewers worldwide, revealing the enchanting, hidden life that lay beneath the waves. Jacques Cousteau died Wednesday at 87, having left his mark on generations.

Cousteau invoked the heavens to explain his connection to the sea.

"When you dive," he once said, "you begin to feel that you're an angel. It's a liberation of your weight."

Cousteau's foundation referred to one of his most noted documentaries in announcing his death.

"Jacques-Yves Cousteau has rejoined the Silent World," it said in a statement. His wife, Francine, said Cousteau died at home in Paris before dawn after suffering a respiratory infection and heart problems.

"But his voice continues to be heard," Francine Cousteau said, vowing to continue his struggle by finishing the Calypso II, the research ship he was building to replace the Calypso, which sank last year.

Regents could raise tuition if state approves

JOHN HENDERSON

The Kansas Board of Regents passed a resolution Thursday to raise tuition in all colleges and universities under its control, provided the state decides to pay twice the amount that students will pay.

Steve Jordan, executive director of the board, said the state expects the board to raise tuition every year, at least with regard for inflation.

'The raises have averaged seven percent per year for the past 20 years," he said.

The amount of the resolution, which raises the cost of attending a Regents school one dollar per credit hour, is actually lower than average this year, Jordan said, and would raise university budgets by 2.8 per-

The resolution was passed unanimously during the second afternoon of the board meeting, without any questions or comments from Regents.

Jordan said Regents member Bob Talkington, who presided over the budgetary section of the agenda, had been working on the resolution for more than three months prior to the meeting. The package deal in the resolution was authored by the Budget, Tuition and Fees Committee in April. At the end of the second day, Talkington was elected the new chairman of the Board of Regents.

The committee is made up of Regents, university presidents and vice presidents, Jordan said. The board reviewed the resolution in May and again the first day of the meeting, Jordan said.

The board will now look to the Kansas legislature to pay two dollars per credit hour enrolled next year in Regents schools. If the legislature decides not to pay, the board won't raise tuition, Jordan said.

"That's part of the deal," he said. "The resolution is very specific about that."

The legislature was about to raise Regents funding by $4 million, but that plan was cut in the final state budget, Jordan said.

The Regents' proposal will work nicely as a replacement if approved, he said.

"The two-dollar match by the state is about equal to $4 million," he Jordan said he doesn't think this will affect next year's enrollment. He pointed out that tuition hikes in previous years were higher, and that this year's plan earmarks the new money to pay for technology upgrades.

The only purpose for the raise in tuition is for technology, so, in essence, it's a restricted fund," he

University students are less likely to accept tuition increases if it's not obvious how the money will be spent, Jordan said. "This isn't just a general tuition increase," he said. "They'll be able to see the new equipment that this he Country Stampede may have only been three days long, but the precautions to ensure safety were planned six months in advance.

From problems due to alcohol consumption to preventing heat exhaustion, the local safety department were hard at work this past weekend to ensure safety.

Main concerns included preventing problems associated with alcohol consumption and heat exhaustion. Members of law enforcement from Riley and Potowatomic counties were stationed on-site to assist those in need of help.

"We have two tents set up inside the Country Stampede grounds, both are easily accessible to all," Steve Moyer, lieutenant paramedic for Riley County Emergency Medical Services, said.

Workers rotated shifts or worked on an on-call basis to avoid exposure to the heat for all three days of the

"That is why we'are here, just in case they encounter any problems," Moyer said.

Heat-related health complications or other problems might have been reduced by smaller crowds in the afternoons.

The headlining acts performed in cooler evening Campers and those attending the shows were able to fight the heat by drinking plenty of water. "People need to remember to drink plenty of fluids, whether it be water or a sports drink product," Moyer said. "If they are not urinating once every hour, they are not drinking enough." The availability of emergency or medical services helped some country-music fans stay healthy enough to enjoy more of the weekend.

"I started to get dizzy and before I knew it somebody was there to help me, and get me to the tent and cool me off," Ken Holladay, from Oklahoma City, said. "Without them I might not have been able to enjoy the rest of the Stampede.

here were plenty of country music starts, craft booths and fans at Country Stampede this weekend, but there may not have been enough water.

Capt. Joel Reimer of the Riley Country Emergency Medical Service worked in the first-aid tent on the Stampede grounds. He said he was concerned about the amount of free water available.

"We think there should be more water available. That's about all I am going to say," Reimer said, "We tried really hard to get more water out here than what they do have out here."

Reimer said the decision about the availability of water and location of water trucks was made by Stampede officials.

John O'Gara, Stampede festival manager, said the location of the water trucks

STORY BY MARY RENEE SMITH was a well-thought-out decision. Had the trucks been located near a thoroughfare, muddy conditions could have created hazards, he said.

> "You get a bog like that, you're going to have people fall, slip and hurt themselves," O'Gara said. "It makes a lot of sense to put them far back out of the main flow of traffic."

> The main flow of traffic was through the middle of the fairgrounds and rows of vendors. The water trucks, or water buffaloes, were behind those booths at the back of the grounds.

> Once concert-goers found the water trucks, there were restrictions to be followed before water could be obtained.

Wary of bombing explanation, 2 Oklahomans force grand-jury probe

OKLAHOMA CITY - With Timothy McVeigh awaiting execution and Terry Nichols facing federal trial, a grand jury opens a new investigation of the Oklahoma City bombing Monday, prompted by two men's profound distrust for the official explanation of the blast. The men - one of them the grandfather of two bombing victims - collected 13,500 signatures to empanel the grand jury. In doing so, they ignored the objections of Oklahoma's attorney general and Oklahoma County's district attorney, who has already promised state murder trials for McVeigh and

"The verdict will be that, yes, there were other people with McVeigh in Oklahoma City that committed the bombing," a confident State Rep. Charles Key predicts.

Key and Glenn Wilburn, an Oklahoma City accountant who lost grandsons Chase and Colton Smith in the blast, say they were motivated by two basic beliefs: that a larger conspiracy was behind the bombing and that federal agents had prior knowledge of the attack.

Although the federal indictment against McVeigh and Nichols alleged they plotted the bombing with "others unknown," federal authorities now doubt a larger conspiracy. And they vehemently deny any prior knowledge.

Arrest of 14-year-old in beheading leaves Japanese relieved but disturbed

KOBE, Japan - An arrest in the beheading of a young boy was a relief to many Japanese, but the capture provided bitter comfort: The confessed killer is only 14 years old.

The grisly murder of 11-year-old Jun Hase and the attacker's subsequent threat to kill more people had terrified the quiet Kobe neighborhood where the two boys lived.

Police were investigating the possibility that the suspect was also behind the fatal bludgeoning of a girl in March and the stabbing of another girl. Investigators said they were searching for a motive.

Saudi official says no Saudi role in al-Sayegh investigation

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia - Saudi Arabia says it will not interfere in the case of a Saudi dissident held by U.S. officials in the bombing of military barracks that killed 19 American air-

The Saudis had demanded that Hani al-Sayegh be turned over to them, saying the June 25, 1996, truck bombing of the U.S. barracks near eastern Dhahran occurred on Saudi soil and that al-Sayegh was a Saudi citizen.

The suspect stopped in the United States en route to Canada in 1996. He was deported from Canada to the United States on June 17.

Al-Sayegh cut a deal with U.S. authorities to tell investigators what he knew about the attack last year in exchange for not being deported to Saudi Arabia, where he faced execution if convicted.

Once an island of fishing villages and pirate hangouts, Hong Kong was leased by Britain on June 9, 1898 from China for 99 years. On June 30, 1997, the lease is up.

Consisting of more than 230 islands and islets, Hong Kong has evolved into an empire of skyscrapers, industry and high finance.

On July 1, the sovereignty of Hong Kong reverts back to China. Most of the 6.3-million residents probably won-

Hong Kong, as China's major gateway city, includes extensive infrastructure developments, growing commercial markets and a prosperous business environment.

Some Chinese students at K-State are concerned about the change.

Upward Bound Math and Science kicked off its second season on the K-State campus as students flooded the fourth floor of West Hall June 15.

Thirty high-school students from Topeka and Salina are participating in the six-week program, which is designed to encourage college studies in mathematics and sciences.

In addition, the program orchestrates a pre-college experience to enable a smooth transition from high school.

"It's a great learning experience which helps us prepare for college and our next year's school classes," Mark Reeves, Salina South junior, said.

Most students were nominated for the program by high-school instructors or a counselor. A few received peer nominations from last year's participants.

Four K-State students; Kim Bruna, junior in mass communications; Tasha Dixon, 1997 graduate in kinesiology; Paul Jackson, sophomore in business administration pre-professional; and Todd Wells, senior in family studies and human nature, have dedicated their summer as peer mentors for UBMS. They live in the dorms with the students and assist in familiarizing participants with college life.

Stampede officials failed to look at past mistakes when planning ountry Stampede came to Manhattan last weekend, and brought with it problems.

Stampede planning and personnel were unprepared for the heat, accidents and violence that accompanied the event. With the murder, violence and hundreds of cases of heat stoke that occurred last year, Stampede should have been better planned this time.

Red Cross tents were full every day, and when the water supply started running out, it was apparent Stampede had a host of serious problems.

Coupled with the fact there was no weather contingency, even after last year's tornado warnings, Stampede planners proved they had not learned from the tragic past of the event. Coolers and water containers were not allowed into the Stampede festival area.

As a money-making event, Stampede was a success. Venders made money off of the fact that it was hard to find free water at Stampede.

Country music fans who came to listen to the music might have been disappointed. What was supposed to be a family festival rapidly turned into a giant party ground.

While this has become a problem for Manhattan, it's not Manhattan's fault Stampede planners developed poor policies and regulations for the festival. Stampede could develop a bad reputation for violence, that will chase away both families and country music fans.

These problems are not unsolvable. With a little effort from Stampede executives, policies could be adapted to turn Stampede back into a family-oriented event.

Free water, better security and communication should be a part of next year's Stampede.

If the focus of the festival could be turned back to the music, Stampede personnel could rebuild its reputation as a safe, fun country music ► ED BOARD uesday, something not just of local or regional importance, but an international event years in the making will occur.

The continent is Asia, where in 1841 a British naval ship sailed into Hong Kong and Captain Charles Elliot seized the area. A year and a half later, a treaty ceded Hong Kong Island to Britain.

At midnight Hong Kong time, it happens. Great Britain will hand over control of Hong Kong to China.

There will probably be CNN specials and many newspaper articles to celebrate this event, but what will actually happen remains to be seen.

China and Hong Kong are run very differently. Hong Kong has had a taste of democracy and freedom over the past century and a half. There will be a transitional perifreedom to cause them to worry Related stories about the future. on pages 1 and 3

Even though there is supposed to be a separate system to govern Hong Kong, will this be done? China is the same country that had students shot while they were protesting in Tiananmen square not too many years ago.

According to Newsweek, C.H. Tung, the territory's chief executive, has proposed tightening civil liberties laws, and suggested protesters would have to get permission from the police in advance of protesting.

So he is saying that the police would have to authorize a protest. If this is so, could they also ban a protest?

China has arranged the appointment of a provisional legislature to replace the elected one until a new election can be conducted.

Regardless of the human or civil rights aspects of the country, there are large economic factors at stake. Hong Kong is an important economic power, and this takeover will create a new trading superpower.

In 1995, Hong Kong did $50 billion in trade with the United States. That is more trade than China did with the United States in the same year. As of 1995, 13 percent of foreign investments in Hong Kong were from the United States.

Here are some quick facts: China is the fastest growing economy in the world, and the 11th largest trading nation. Hong Kong is the eighth largest, although 90 percent of Hong Kong's reexports come from mainland China. These items would be all of those products in your house that say "Made in China" on the bottom

But will this continue?

Apparently there are those who do not feel

Just a few months ago, an 18th-century Chinese bowl sold for $2.8 million at an art auction in Hong Kong.

Why? Chinese law forbids the export of art that is over 200 years old. Even though Hong Kong is supposed to be able to write its own export laws after Britain hands the colony over, according to Newsweek, many experts are skeptical about this, and think this may be the last time to get antique art such as this bowl out of the country. Thus, the prices are rising.

Hong Kong is a huge economic center, with many interests outside of China. The United States will be watching closely to see what happens to this island, and how China will handle the one-country, two-systems approach to governing. The world waits to see what will happen to the country, the world economics, relations and the people of Hong Kong.

strange thoughts. After Tyson bit off a small portion of Holyfield's ear, referee Mills Lane allowed the fight to continue. After Tyson's nibble, both heavyweights were obviously a bit upset. Red steam blew out of Tyson's horns, and rage seeped from Holyfield's gnawed ear. What followed was some of the best fighting since gladiators killed each other in ancient Rome. In the boxing fray that ensued, Tyson bit Holyfield's other ear. The bell rang shortly after ending the round and the fight.

When Lane called the fight, Tyson immediately stormed from his corner, swinging madly in the direction of Holyfield. As Tyson did this, the ring became a circus stage. Las Vegas cops, MGM casino security, reporters, announcers, Bozo the Clown, Tarzan and Don King all charged into the ring to contain Kid Tyson.

All the chaos that ensued after Holyfield's lobe fell to the floor was more entertaining than any boxoffice blockbuster I have ever seen. In all the confusion unfolding before my eyes, I almost forgot the cash I shelled out to see the fight.

Almost. I wanted some answers.

Those in the Tyson camp contended the origin of the under-handed fighting began with Holyfield head-butting repeatedly. Tyson's three-inch-deep laceration above his right eye served as evidence.

So what? Sometimes in a boxing match you bump heads. Oh, now I get it - Tyson's only retort had to have been to bite the ear. Twice. Golly, it was practically required of the man.

John Horne, Tyson's co-manager, called Holyfield a bitch after the fight, because of the head butts. Instead, he should have warned the Vegas area to look out, because a violent, off-bal-

That's a pretty positive way to close the book on the success of the baseball team this season. But it sure makes it difficult for K-State coach Mike Clark, whose team now has holes to fill.

Not that he minds 'It was a wonderful draft for us," he said. 'It gives us credibility when we tell players they can come here and improve."

Now, Clark is turning that credibility into signed national letters of intent. He signed two players last week, Quinn Cravens and Tim Johnson, bringing his recruit count for next season up to seven.

Wandering all over campus, throwing Frisbee-like discs at light poles and sculptures, seemingly screaming and yelling at nothing. What in the world are they doing?

Welcome to disc golfing, a sport emulating traditional golf. Instead of golf balls, it's flying plastic discs. Instead of lake hazards, it's out-of-bounds sidewalks students have to watch out for. Instead of wallet-draining expenses, it's a relatively inexpensive sport.

"Disc golfing is a lot cheaper than regular golf. The course is free. There's no green fees," said Mitch Reffitt, a Manhattan resident who has used the course at K-State since 1982.

He golfs every Saturday and Sunday, and only carries two discs with him. "I've been using these two discs since Lately, Reffitt has only been golfing with two discs, but he said most golfers carry seven to 10. There's a disc for every situation, depending on weather condi-tions, angle and distance. There are also drivers, mid-range drivers, putters and approach discs.

Some discs fare better in the wind, while others are designed to head into the wind. Also, different discs veer off to the left or right, and some travel straight in the direction they are thrown.

Carrying a full set of discs is cheaper that a full bag of golf clubs. Most discs cost less than $10, and without having to pay for balls or course fees, getting started in disc golfing can cost much less than $100.

However succeeding in the sport, like traditional golf, can take some time. "It takes about a year to get good," said

Jim Roper, Manhattan, who has been golfing for about two years. "Unless you're as bad as me. Then it will take at east a year and a half."

He encourages new players to try the sport out. Aside from a keeping a few course courtesies in mind - mainly not talking to or standing alongside a golfer who is throwing - there's not a lot to do except get out on the course and try it.

Thousands of sweating, screaming fans awaited musicians at the Country Stampede this weekend.

Chris LeDoux is known for his energized, quick-paced concerts, and he didn't let the crown down this time. He opened with three songs back to back, and then opened up the action. He got a crazed look on his face, and the crowd picked up the excitement. He was enjoying himself.

Since Chris LeDoux's fans are primarily true cowboys — due partly to his National Rodeo Championship background — he didn't have to do much to get the crowd involved

The Doobie Brothers, on the other hand, had their work cut out for them. They not only had to play to a crowd that was skeptical to begin with, but they also played during what became a supper break. However, they managed to draw the crowd in and were screamed back for an encore.

Indigo Girls bring folk rock to Dallas Starplex Ampitheatre

REVIEW BY BRANDI HERTIG

Fun-loving fans of every sexual persuasion and hairstyle came together Saturday night for an all-out rock concert by the mothers of folk rock, the Indigo Girls. The duo, along with a back-up band of three, lit up the Dallas skyline at the Coca-Cola Starplex Ampitheatre.

The show began on a down note with the opening band, Lift. This generic alterna-band out of Atlanta assaulted the audience for a very long 45-minute show with its bargain-basement guitar riffs and indistinguishable lyrics. The only good thing about Lift was they made the arrival of the Indigo Girls all the sweeter.

The Girls kicked off the concert with "Strange Fire," which seemed like an unlikely candidate for an opening tune. However, its familiar melody and lilting rhythms provoked screams of joy from the standing audience.

They rolled into somewhat uncharted territory after that, with "Get Out The Map," from their latest album, "Shaming of the Sun." Emily Saliers brandished a banjo, and the pair played the song exactly as they sound on the album. Perhaps with newer material, it's a safer route to take than startling fans with embellishments and improvisation. The song was definitely a crowd-pleaser, however, drawing them to their feet once again.

Ask any long-time Indigo Girls fan, and they'll most likely affirm that "Shaming of the Sun" is not the best effort Saliers and Amy Ray have put forth in recent years. This was evident when they played several of their newer songs from the album. The audience would go from a lovely state of bouncing and arm-flailing during such beloved hits as "Least Complicated" to a distracted, catatonic air during newer songs like "Everything In Its Own Time."

As concert-goer Erin Downey described the song "Scooter Boys," "This sounds like the part on 'Super Mario Brothers' when you go down

The Indigo Girls do have a few winners on "Shaming," with "Get Out The Map," "Shame On You," "It's Alright" and "Shed Your Skin." The rest of the album is more of a departure from what the Indigo Girls folk-circuit fans have come to love over the years, which could explain the despondency during the performances of some of the songs from "Shaming." Even still, the Indigo Girls made some of the worst songs from the album sound absolutely fantastic live.

The Indigo Girls pulled out all the stops, revealing the wonderful breadth of their versatility. At one moment, they had the audience captivated in silent awe, watching the creation of the most beautiful music around. The next moment, they shook the rafters with their hardedged, pulsating rhythms.

Somehow, the Indigo Girls managed to shrink the magnitude of the Starplex Ampitheatre into an intimate gathering of fans. During several songs, Saliers and Ray would stop singing, allowing the audience to take over the role, something both performers and fans relished. The sound of thousands of voices singing at the tops of their lungs was a moving experience, however rambunctious and out of tune it may have been.

It was certainly the older songs the audience was longing to hear. The Indigo Girls surprised the crowd by diving back deep into the duo's history and performing "Prince of

Mechanical bull enhances Stampede

It looked like an oasis.

With a tall white, roof-top, Remington's huge tent saloon at Country Stampede proved to be more than just a watering hole.

Friday night after the music of the Doobie Brothers, hundreds of fans headed for shade at Remingtons. The saloon featured bands, beer and a seductive mechanical bull.

Even though Dustin Evans' band was playing on stage, the bull was still the star attraction.

"It's a thrill, like bungee jumping," Ty Jackson, Remington employee, said. "People do it that have never even seen a cow before."

At times, the line of people waiting to ride the bull was longer than the line at the beer garden. The saloon, at the east end of the festival grounds, was sponsored by Remingtons of Topeka. Gordon Garrett, attorney and principle owner, said his Topeka saloon is primarily country and western. He brought one of his two

At a cost of $10,000 the hydraulic bull and air-mattress are state of the art. "It is very sophisticated," Garrett said, pointing to the bull.

Mechanical bulls, such as those seen in "Urban Cowboy" with John Travolta in the 1980s, did not possess the same technology as the one at Stampede.

While Evans and his band played on stage, spectators crowded around the bull's fence and stood on picnic tables to watch bull riders.

Rusty Ungeheuer, Topeka, operated the two levers to control the bull's buck and spin actions.

He has has been operating the mechanical bull for eight months. "I've pretty much been around it all my life," he said, when asked how he trained for bats/bat1.html

Holy bug-zapper! They're back! While "Batman and Robin" plays in local theaters, wild bats wing their way around Manhattan, including K-State's Anderson Hall.

Their mission — insect control. Even the bat found hanging from the ceiling in Anderson Hall's basement several weeks ago was looking for bugs.

The Big Brown Bat can eat approximately 1,500-3,000 insects in one night. Its prey is mainly mosquitoes but also includes flies and smaller moths. Some feed for three to four hours, while others go through a feed-and-rest cycle all night long. Many like to feed off street lights.

These hairy little creatures make up 25 percent of all mammals in the world.

'The most common bats in Manhattan are the Big and Little Brown, Hoary and Red," Schanee Anderson, curator of education at the Sunset Zoological Park, said.

Local bats roost in caves, barns, trees, under shelters or in bat boxes where it is dark and dry. They possess excellent vision and sonar locators to find food.

A bat uses echo-location, the process of reflecting high-frequency sounds off objects, to determine the size of the insect, where the insect is going, and if it is its preferred feeding choice.

During the winter, Brown Bats hibernate, while Hoary Bats migrate out of the Anderson said most bats are light enough they could be mailed with a firstclass stamp. Local bats are several inches in length and usually weigh less than one ounce.

Nocturnal, or crepustular, bats either stay up all night or come out during dawn or dusk.

Captive Brown Bats live an average of 25 years, while wild bats live half as long. Captive bats are very sensitive and fragile, Anderson said.

"Once a bat has been humanized or raised by humans, very rarely can you release it in the wild," she said.

The Sunset Zoo has three bats. Kept off-exhibit, they are used in the its education programs.

Horatio, a male Brown Bat from Georgia, spends most of its time under Anderson's collar.

Myths abound about bats, and Hollywood is the bat's worst enemy. Anderson said bats are not blind or viscous and don't fly in people's hair. "It's just a shame people destroy them," she said. "Yet in one sweep, we can kill 30,000 by closing a cave or tearing down a barn."

Only three out of 1,000 kinds drink blood, and they go after cattle or livestock in South America.

Cats are the No. 1 predator of bats in America. Other predators include owls, snakes, foxes and raccoons.

Fifty-three percent of all North American bats are endangered or being considered for the endangered list.

Anderson, who has a bachelor of science degree in environmental education, said some scientists claim bats are the most endangered species of mammals in the world.

Anderson said it is against the law to own a bat.

"Bats can carry rabies, but you have a better chance of getting rabies from a dog than from a bat," she said.

Brandon Lapo, sophomore undecided, isn't convinced.

CANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Lapo was parked overlooking Tuttle Creek Dam last August when something bit him in the armpit. He said he whacked it off his arm, but didn't clearly see the

"There were two markings on my arm," he said. "A bunch of doctors looked at me and said they had never seen this before."

Assuming it was a bat, Lapo had to get seven rabies shots.

"I'm pretty paranoid now," he said. If an injured bat is found, Anderson recommends it be taken to the K-State Vet- Med Teaching Hospital's small animal admission desk, or if after hours, the emergency room. From there, it is usually sent to Project Release.

If a bat is found in a home, building or outside, the best advice is to leave it alone, Anderson said.

"If it found its way in, it can usually find its way out," she said. "The best thing to do is to shut the door and leave for a while."

The best bat-watching is at the rose garden in City Park and at Tuttle Creek Lake by trees or park shelters at dawn or dusk. The observer should hold still and be patient

It is legal to have bat houses. "Bat boxes are only about 20-percent efficient at first," Anderson said. "Experience shows it may take one to two years for bats to find a new house and move in.' Anderson said she is very adamant in her support for bat preservation.

"These are animals that have a distinct personality," she said. "They are very individualistic."

While not everyone loves bats, bats fill an important niche. As nature's bugzappers, bats are here for a purpose.

Bat house basics Simple plans to preserving our 9.75"

FLYING FRIENDS This bat house is designed for most American bats.

- Western Red Cedar is highly recommended for its ability to withstand exposure to the elements, however, other non-treated woods can be used.
- Six feet of 1 x 12" board is needed to construct the house.
- Vertical slats of varying length need to be placed in the house for the bats to • Use rough lumber with 1/16" grooves
- cut horizontally, at one-half inch intervals on all vertical surfaces. This will give the bats something to cling to.
- · Seal all of the joints with silicone caulk to prevent heat loss.
- Position the bat house at least 15 feet off the ground, facing east or southeast to catch the morning sun.
- It could take as long as one year for bats to frequent the bat house.

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 7 Darkness." They also did a gentle version of "Power Of Two," which sounded similar to the performance they gave on "1200 Curfews." Another surprise came with the performance of "Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee." Originally written by Buffy Sainte-Marie, the Indigo Girls put two versions of it on "1200 Curfews." Although it was a song no one anticipated hearing, it came as a welcome surprise, drawing people to their feet once again, clapping hands held high above their heads.

The two-hour concert closed out with a high-charged "Closer To Fine," much to the delight of the throngs of fans, who may have feared the duo would leave the stage without performing what is perhaps their signature

Although the concert was a beautiful display of just how marvelous the Indigo Girls are, and have always been, there was the feeling of lingering disappointment when the house lights were brought back up.

Without having played "Ghost" or anything from "Nomads*Indians*Saints," the concert seemed unfinished. Which is a good enough excuse to see the Indigo Girls over and over again.

Hard work, decision-making and public-speaking skills paid off for 60 students competing at the 1997 Livestock Judging and Oral Reasons Camp at K-State.

4-H and FFA members, ages 14-18, were eligible to participate and enhance their livestock-judging and oral-reasoning skills. Participants judged different classifications of swine, sheep and beef cattle. The oral reasoning section allowed a student to explain to the judge how the classification was assigned and which evaluations contributed to the decision.

Most of the campers were from Kansas, although some from Colorado, Nebraska, Oklahoma and Maryland also participated.

The camp was sponsored by the K-State Department of Animal Sciences and Industry, Livestock Judging Team and Block & Bridle.

Scott Schaake, coach for the K-State Livestock Judging Team and assistant professor in animal sciences and industry, served as director of the camp for the Schaake said the camp put K-State judging team members into a coaching situation as they helped students.

During the camp the students watched instructional videos on taking notes, gave oral critiques and participated in sample judging classes. The classes covered judging beef cattle, sheep and swine.

"We work them hard; it's not a camp for fun and games," Schaake said.

The camp finished with an actual judging contest with awards given to the outstanding judges of the contest. "I think it is a tremendous opportunity," Calvin Drake, professor in animal sciences and industry, said. "It teaches them discipline, public speaking, how to make sound judging decisions and increases their knowledge of the livestock industry."

Brady law ruling unlikely to change process for gun buyers

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TUCSON, Ariz. - The Supreme Court's decision to throw out part of the Brady gun-control law does not mean gun buyers across the nation will be free of criminal background checks.

The court ruled 5-4 Friday that the federal government cannot force local law enforcement authorities to conduct background checks on would-be gun buyers. Left intact was a five-day waiting period before someone can buy a handgun.

Within hours of the decision, authorities and gun dealers from New Hampshire to Oregon said very little would change in the 27 states that require the checks.

Only Ohio said it would end the checks, beginning immediately. This is not going to substantially impair the effectiveness of the Brady law," said Dennis Henigan, an attorney for Handgun Control Inc., the gun-control lobby headed by Sarah Brady.

In Pennsylvania, state police spokesman Sgt. Tim Allue said wouldbe gun owners still would be checked out. "We've been doing that for 50 years, and we will continue to do that," he said.

A national system for instant checks is expected to be in place by late 1998. Gun dealers said the state laws and the Brady law's waiting period would probably prevent a surge in sales. "I don't think things will change at all," said Rich Vance, owner of Vance's Shooters Supplies in Columbus, Ohio.

"It's business as usual," added Diane Jensen of Jensen's Custom Ammunition, a Tucson dealership that averages from 3,500 to 5,000 handgun sales a year.

Bob Glass, who owns the Paladin Arms gun shop in Longmont, Colo., said he doubted the ruling would change the way he does business.

"I'm glad the court ruled as it did, but it certainly didn't go nearly far enough," Glass said. "If in fact it turns out - even temporarily - we don't have to do background checks, we certainly won't." Yet there will be some changes.

Sheriff Leo Samaniego of El Paso, Texas, said background checks on gun buyers living outside the city limits probably would end.

The message I guess that is sent out is: Go buy whatever. Nobody needs to know what kind of record you've got or if you've been in a mental institution or anything like that," Samaniego said.

Ohio Deputy Attorney General Mark Weaver said the court ruling removes the state's authority to carry out background checks.

In Arizona, the Department of Public Safety, which conducts background checks for police departments statewide, will not change its policy for now, spokesman Lt. Rick Knight said.

There was dismay with the ruling in some states.

The ruling affects 23 states without gun-control laws, and "puts all of us in jeopardy," said Wisconsin Attorney General James Doyle Jr. He said criminals will buy a gun where background checks will now be optional and bring them to Wisconsin.

"I hope that states that do not have state background check requirements will continue to conduct the checks voluntarily," said Doyle, who also is president of the National Association of Attorneys General.

was worth the small amount of money I put forth. If you're not going to see a good fight with your pay-per-view buck, ya might as well enjoy some complete pandemonium breaking loose inside and outside the ring.

However, I do wish these ruffians would have boxed one another. Last I heard, in a boxing match one man is supposed to fall to the canvas after sustaining innumerable amounts of crushing body blows, head wounds and nose breaking upper cuts.

It didn't happen Saturday night. Let's just say flesh flew in the ring, and it wasn't from a Tyson upper-cut.

Where does the boxing community go from here?

The most recognizable figure in the sport, and I use the word sport lightly in this instance, proved himself utterly insane. Holyfield is thankful a janitor found the missing part of his ear in one of Ferdie Pacheco's beer cups (not true but a good story), and everyone else in boxing is not worth paying a dime for.

besides Tyson and Holyfield? Maybe the 100-year-old George Foreman spanking Ronald McDonald for a burger. At least he only bites hamburgers.

the early 1970s, has 18 pins with a par of 58. The front nine, par 27, consists solely of par-threes. The back nine is a little tougher with four par-fours mixed in to bring the total to 31.

However, the current course is not the same as the original course.

"The course has had to change over time, because the campus has changed," Goodman said. "But there has been a marked course since the early 1970s."

The distances on the course range from 230 to 430 feet, and the total distance for the course is 5,845 feet.

There aren't any lakes for players to lose discs in, but bushes have been known to steal a few. The main hazard to watch for while playing is other people. Rules remind players to watch for pedestrians and vehicles, although accidents happen.

"We've hit a few people over our time," Reffitt said of his 15 years on the course. Scorecards, as well as detailed maps of the course, are available free of charge at

The Pathfinder on Poyntz Avenue. Various discs are also available, Generally, the sides of drivers are thinner and sharper, providing better aerodynamics and distance. Putters have thicker sides to provide better accuracy. There are tournaments with cash prizes, although not quite as large as the PGA tour. Disc golfing offers competition, but many players take to the course for other reasons "I don't really care how well I do," said Ralph Nyberg, Manhattan. "I'm just out here for the social aspects.' While traditional golf is often played, because of its social aspects, disc golf has its advantages.

"Disc golf is considerably easier than ball golf," Goodman said. "It can be frustrating, but ball golf can be frustrating, too. I have more fun playing disc golf. It's a lot easier."

He also said the popularity of the sport is booming.

"It's not just the regular guys out there any more," he said. "I see families playing out there now."

CHEMICIAL SPILL SMALL TOWN TO

ROSSVILLE, Kan. - The city's more than 1,000 residents were allowed to return to town today after being evacuated when a Union Pacific train carrying hazardous materials crashed into another.

The engineer on one train was killed, Union Pacific Railroad spokesman John Bromley said. The conductor in the same train suffered minor injuries, he said.

Most people in this eastern Kansas town were taken to high schools in two nearby communities, St. Marys and Silver Lake. Those evacuated included about 80 nursing home residents, who were awakened about 4:15 a.m. and taken to a nurs- Jeff, heard sirens about 3:30 a.m. and ing home in St. Marys.

Small quantities of hazardous materials were spilled, said Mark Davis, another UP spokesman, including such things as corrosive liquids, bromine chloride and lowlevel medical waste.

"I can't stress enough that these were very small amounts of materials," Davis said. "There was no danger here."

Residents were allowed to return to their homes about 9 a.m. A one-mile radius around the accident site was expected to remain cordoned off most of the day. No homes were located in that area.

Robin Lampe said she and her husband, policemen were going door-to-door to evacuate people.

"At first I just assumed it was an accident on Highway 24. It's rare to hear sirens in and around Rossville," Lampe said. "Your first thought is, I hope everyone's OK, it's not a teen-ager or a local resident.

"You could tell it was extremely urgent because of the loudness of the sirens. My first thought was maybe they're looking for a criminal, but wait a minute, this is Rossville, that doesn't happen."

Lampe said although she didn't know what chemicals were involved or how it might affect the town, she had no concern about returning to her home. Rossville is about 15 miles northwest of Topeka, the state capital. "At the moment, we're all breathing a collective sigh of relief that this wasn't as serious as initially thought," Gov. Bill

Graves said, after a news conference at the scene by emergency officials. Bromley said a westbound train was unable to stop at a crossing and crashed into the side of a moving eastbound train about 2:30 a.m. Bromley said it was unclear why the train could not stop.

High yields, warm weather and long harvesting days have greeted wheat harvesters at the K-State Agronomy farms. "We've been very fortunate," Vernon

"We're pleasantly surprised here, too," he said

Better than typical yields have been recorded at K-State's agronomy farms. "We're in the pretty early stages yet," Karlson Mannschreck, associate agronomist at K-State, said. Yields of 65 bushels per acre are a fairly realistic goal, he said. The harvest in general is equal or better than past harvests, Mannschreck said.

"I think it has a good chance to be above average," he said. The weather forecast for the next three to four days is very encouraging, Mannschreck said. He said even slight increases in moisture can delay harvest-

Late rains and dew delayed harvest until 4:30 p.m. one day last week, Mannschreck said. Wheat was cut until dark when the dew dissipated. Harvesting in other parts of Kansas have been slowed by rains and the lack of harvest crews, he said. "We've been hearing a shortage of combines," he said. Wet weather in southern Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas have held crews behind, Mannschreck said. "I am sure some areas are more than one week behind," he said. According to a July 1 report from the Kansas Association of Wheat Growers, combines were rolling across Kansas at a rapid pace.

Most areas of the state are 40 to 50 percent complete. The south-central part of Kansas is 50 to 70 percent harvested, according to the report.

Dennis Bedore with the Stockton Farmers Union said harvesters could cut 15 percent a day with good weather. The weather there could not be more perfect there, he said Bedore said 109,000 bushels were brought to the Stockton Farmers Union July 1. He estimated the average yield of the wheat at 45 bushels per acre with a 60 pound test weight.

The Stockton Farmers Union might have to dump wheat on the ground because the elevators were too full, Bedore said. He added the Union has not dumped wheat on the ground for 12

Responsibility key to safe Independence Day activity

BRIAN MCGINLEY

Being responsible on the Fourth of July is the key to having a good time. This weekend is a time to celebrate U.S. Independence, but it can also become a dangerous time if certain rules are not followed.

Chuck Tannehill, assistant director of Manhattan Fire Department, said a simple way to ensure safety is to follow basic guidelines made by local fire

Gerald Sprong, CEO of FirstBank, said he believes his bank's bid wasn't properly considered by the University. His suit asks that the new cards being issued by Commerce Bank be declared void by law.

"Basically, we were assured by the University that this would be a fair and proper process," he said. "We do not believe that it was."

The cards would be available to all K-State students and would replace the current Wildcat Cards. The new cards would cover transactions from on- and off-campus locations, including residence hall meals, library checkout, vending services and at certain Manhattan businesses.

Fort Hays State, Wichita State and Emporia State all have similar cards, Krause said, and all have partnerships with banks for the debit accounts

The aftermath of Country Stampede might resemble the path of a tornado, but the trampled grass and piles of garbage shouldn't have long-term side effects

Bill Porter, Tuttle Creek State Park manager, said after last year's Stampede, the park did need to replant or overseed any grass. He hopes that holds true this year. "We got very lucky in the fact that once the Stampede was over, we received about a half inch to three-quarters of an inch of slow rain. The grass that had been trampled and turned brown, came back," Porter said

Porter said Stampede wear and tear is expected when so many people spend three days in one campground area.

"If it's a wet weekend, there will be even more grassy areas to repair," he said. Porter said a worst-case scenario would be if all the grass in the River Pond Area needed to be replanted after Stampede. He estimated replanting the grass might cost $12,000 to $13,000, if replanting is indeed necessary Country Stampede will foot the bill if the grass needs replanted this year, Porter said.

"We don't really have any costs. The Stampede people pay us to rent the park for three days, but they also have to have insurance policies for any damage to any of our facilities," Porter said. "There's very little expense that's going to be incurred by the park."

Greg Wurst, a United States Army Corps of Engineers natural resources specialist, said the land around Tuttle Creek is owned by the Army Corps of Engineers, including Tuttle Creek State Park.

'Last year we didn't have anything to do with Stampede. It was all in the state park. This year for the first time, Stampede rented additional land that lay outside of the borders of Tuttle Creek State Park for more parking," Wurst said.

Wurst said he thinks the conditions of the park could have been much worse, especially if it had rained that weekend.

Empty chairs, names chosen for OKC bombing memorial

OKLAHOMA CITY - In daylight, the 168 stone chairs designed to evoke those killed in the Oklahoma City bombing will seem to float above their glass bases. By night, the glass will glow with light to emphasize the inscribed names of the dead.

The chairs are the centerpiece of a design for a memorial to the bombing victims that was unveiled Tuesday after an international design

The empty chairs will face across a reflecting pool toward the Survivors Tree, an elm that weathered the April 19, 1995, bombing.

A 15-member committee of victims' relatives, survivors, community volunteers and design professionals unanimously chose the design from five finalists, whittled down from 624.

Construction on the $9 million memorial is expected to begin next year. Organizers, who plan to raise the money privately, have already collected $2.5 million.

Teen to be sent to Nevada on raping, killing 7-year-old

LOS ANGELES - A teen-ager will be sent to Nevada to face charges that he raped and murdered a 7-year-old girl at a casino there.

Jeremy Strohmeyer, 18, whispered briefly with his lawyer, Leslie Abramson, before she accepted a judge's order to send him to Nevada by July 14. Strohmeyer is charged with the May 25 killing of Sherrice Iverson, whom authorities say was raped and strangled in a bathroom at the Primadonna Resort in the border town of Primm. Police believe Strohmeyer is the man seen on a surveillance camera chasing the victim into a women's restroom near a video arcade at the resort.

In a court affidavit filed in Nevada, Strohmeyer reportedly told police he was playing hide-and-seek with the girl when he became angered, followed her into the restroom, and sexually assaulted her, then killed her.

Aberdeen battalion commander suspended

ABERDEEN PROVING GROUND, Md. -The Army commander who oversaw the training of seven drill sergeants charged with sexual misconduct has been suspended

Lt. Col. Martin T. Utzig, a 20-year Army veteran, was suspended Friday as the Army Inspector General prepares to release a report critical of commanders at the military training school, about 20 miles north of Baltimore.

Utzig, 41, has been commanding officer of the Ordnance Center and School's 143rd Ordnance Battalion since July 1995. Utzig didn't immediately return telephone callsseeking comment.

Judge strikes down 'don't ask, don't tell' for 2nd time

NEW YORK — The Clinton administration's "don't ask, don't tell" policy for gays in the military is unconstitutional, a federal judge ruled today, reaffirming his earlier ruling.

The 48-page ruling by U.S. District Court Judge Eugene Nickerson concludes that the policy violates the First Amendment's free speech protections.

Woman dies after being pinned by automated pin

PHILLIPSBURG, Kan .- An owner of a bowling alley who was pinned under an automatic pin setter has died from her injuries.

Anita Epstein, 35, of Phillipsburg, tried to dislodge bowling pins that were jammed in the machine Thursday when it activated and pinned her to the floor.

Epstein was flown to a Kearney, Neb., hospital, where she died Monday. The incident has been ruled an accident, Phillips County sheriff's officials said.

Part of bridge collapses in West Virginia, 2 dead

HUNTINGTON, W.Va. — A closed section of a bridge on Interstate 64 collapsed today as it was being repaired, killing two workers and injuring three others.

A steel beam being replaced on the bridge along the Big Sandy River collapsed at 10:45 a.m., falling 100 feet on a crane. One of the dead workers was pinned underneath the wreckage. Divers found the other body in the Witnesses said four workers were on the bridge when it collapsed. Three were taken to a hospital with broken bones. Their conditions were not immediately known.

C.J. Mahan Construction Co. of Columbus, Ohio, began work on the project in March. President Jeff Mahan said he did not know what caused the collapse.

Controversy rises from Pyramid closing

Pyramid Pizza closed its doors Sunday night. There were conflicting reasons for the close and contrary explanations of how Pyramid's employees were treated in the process.

The store is scheduled to reopen August 13.

The employees were given about a week's notice," Joe Addington, corporate vice president and general manger of Pyramid Pizza in Westport, said.

However, Ray Mullenaux, a Pyramid employee and senior in hotel and restaurant management, said that wasn't true.

"He's lying through his teeth. We had an employee meeting Saturday at 9 a.m., and that's when we were told," he said.

"We were told Saturday morning that we employees to tell them the news. were closing tomorrow.

Pat Musselman, junior in park resource management, also remembers the meeting.

We had a meeting on the 28th. We had one day's notice," he said. Mullenaux said the employees were shocked at the news. "The job was really important to a lot of people," he said. With one day's notice, it really didn't go over well."

Frank Seufert, general manager of Pyramid Pizza in Aggieville, declined to comment on how long he had been aware of the impending closing.

However, Seufert said Saturday was the only time he could meet with his Mullenaux said employees are going to be hurt financially by the closure.

"We have a lot of people that are going to have to struggle a little bit," he said. "I know I'm going to have to file for unemployment.

James Schraeder, senior in philosophy, said he too will be filing for unem-

"I perceive this whole thing as handled very unprofessionally," Schraeder No one seemed to know the cause for the store's hiatus. "We weren't given a reason,"

Mullenaux said. Addington said the store was closed to allow for a manager vacation and for the employees to spend time with their families

"That's a good one," Musselman

Seufert agreed with Addington's explanation, and said he could guarantee the store was not experiencing any financial problems.

He declined to comment on whether any of his employees had expressed a desire to spend more time with their

Larry Hafner, 1997 K-State graduate in electrical engineering, said he doesn't understand Addington's reasoning.

"Frank Seufert is the only employee that has a family," he said.

Freedom, constitutional rights behind Independence Day celebration s the fourth of July approaches, Americans should take a minute to think of how lucky they are. But just what does Independence Day really commemorate?

The fourth of July isn't about lighting Roman candles, twirling sparklers or setting off fireworks of every color. It's about freedom - American freedom.

The founders of this country felt strongly enough about the rights of citizens to fight for independence. Because of the founders and the leaders that followed through the last two centuries, the United States exists as it is today.

t's summer time - time to show off your We're in college - time to get things pierced.

A few of the women I work with are thinking about getting their belly buttons pierced. I know a few people who have their belly buttons pierced, among other body parts.

Piercing is OK. It's not quite as permanent as a tattoo, and easier to hide from your grandmother or uptight future employers than an eternal Powercat logo on vour arm.

I have a tattoo — a small four leaf clover - on my ankle. I considered having my belly button pierced. Then I saw myself naked. There will not be any belly button piercing on this body any time soon.

There is a certain kind of belly one must have in order to facilitate a belly button ring. Flat bellies, muscular bellies, bellies with very little hair, bellies with nice belly buttons. Those are the bellies that can have belly-button rings.

I went to Country Stampede last weekend (I had to go. I report news for a radio station.) There were lots of bellies. There were lots of bellies with belly-button rings. There does seem to be a strange correlation between having a belly-button ring and wearing a padded bikini top and very short jeans shorts. Most of the ringed bellies were very nice.

It is an unwritten social law - your belly must be pleasing to the eye to justify having a belly-button ring. It comes right after the law that says men over 60 with beer bellies should not wear Speedo swim trunks, and before the law concerning the visibility of unwanted body hair in public.

After much deliberation I have come to the conclusion I do not have the kind of belly that can sport a cute silver ring through the button. I do have a cute belly button. My belly is not covered with black hair or unsightly moles. It is the shape and form of a belly that isn't quite up

A lame excuse. I've been using the 'I've given birth' defense for a while. My baby boys are 8 and 6 years old now. I guess I could have exercised, fasted, drank diet shakes or cut back on Ben & Jerry's Ice Cream.

I have a 25-year-old belly. It has not been easy for me to admit to myself I am not going to look like I did when I was 17 years old ever again. Gravity and time are the body's worst enemies. Taco Bell, cheesecake and the remote control run a close second. Sure, I really could start exercising and watching what I eat, but that will not turn back the hands of time entirely. My hips

Those 40-year-old men who look like they're pregnant - they're not. Which makes me wonder something else.

Why don't you see men with belly-button rings? I know some men with some very nice bellies. Women will go through large amounts of pain to look appealing. Men just won't go that far.

Everyone is going to get older. Most of us are going to try and fight it. You can't fight it. You could try and deny it. I could get my belly button pierced and wear short shorts and a bikini top. It wouldn't be a pretty picture.

He had not touched her, and now he wondered who had. She was his childhood sweetheart. He had known her since she was barely toddling around. He had loved her so long, and now she had betrayed him.

What was he to do? And the girl - what of her? Just now becoming a woman, she was faced with a decision that would cause those twice her age to quake in fear. A fatherless baby no man would take the blame. And no one believed her claim of the baby's father. For the one she claimed fathered the baby had never, and would never do such a thing - especially to one so young.

Where could she turn? We must not forget the parents — such a disgrace to

After recovering from the initial shock, her mother sent her away in disgrace. Her mother sent her to stay with her sister — the girl's aunt — in a far away town, A very righteous woman, the girl's aunt would surely straighten out her delusions of the father's identity - wouldn't she? Much to the chagrin of the girl's family, the aunt believed her. How could she?

In her kind aunt the girl found comfort. The nights spent crying softly on her aunt's warm shoulder were Somewhere among the boards, nails and tools, he realized what he was to do. It would not be easy, but he would marry her still. He loved her too much to let her go. Sure, most thought she was a whore. Yes, everyone thought he was an illegitimate child, but he had already stolen her heart. He was hers. She was his. There was simply no way around it.

Cubs sweep Royals in round two of interleague play

CHICAGO - Mark Grace didn't look like an All-Star in the eighth inning Wednesday when he made two

But the Chicago first baseman, who was named a reserve, probably shouldn't have been in the game any-

Grace fouled a ball off his right ankle in the first inning but stayed in until the end of the Cubs' 3-2 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

"He could barely stand out there," Cubs manager Jim Riggleman said of Grace, whose two errors led to the Royals' second run. "The fact that he was out there is a testament to the type of player he is. He might have been playing on a broken foot."

Cubs trainer Dave Tumbas said a preliminary examination showed only a bad bruise. Grace, who made two errors in a game for the first time since May 18, 1992, was expected to join the Cubs in Philadelphia on Thursday.

Sammy Sosa hit a solo home to support Kevin Foster to lead the Cubs to their first three-game sweep

Foster (10-5) won for the seventh time in his last nine decisions despite strong southwest winds gusting to 28 mph blowing out of Wrigley Field. The righthander, who has given up an NL-high 16 homers, allowed seven hits in 6 1-3 innings.

"His concentration level is getting better," catcher Scott Servais said. "I'm not going to say he threw everything perfect. We got away with a few." Mel Rojas pitched the ninth for his seventh save, and second in as many outings. Kevin Appier (6-6) took the loss, the fifth in a row for Kansas City. The right-hander allowed nine hits over six innings, walked one and struck out five.

Appier went 0-for-2 at the plate, dropping Royals pitchers to 1-for-16 with seven strikeouts in inter-

Sosa hit a 2-1 pitch from Appier into the right-field seats in the second. In the third, the Royals intentionally walked Grace to load the bases for Sosa, who struck out swinging. Sosa has never hit a grand slam among his 188 career homers and now is 1-for-7 this year with the bases full.

With one out in the fifth, Doug Glanville singled and Brian McRae doubled. Grace singled, scoring Glanville, and Sosa grounded out to score McRae.

The Royals scored their second run in the eighth on Grace's two errors. Jay Bell singled and advanced to second when Cubs reliever Kent Bottenfield attempted to pick Bell off and the throw got past Grace. Then, Grace caught a foul ball and tried to get Bell tagging at third, but the throw was high for another error, scoring Kansas City dropped to 4-5 in interleague play.

K-State crew returns from nationals

Last week, four members of K-State's men's crew team participated in the United States Rowing Elite National Championship.

Tom Hull, Wally Margheim, Jorge Coley and Rob Bidwell drove to Oak Ridge, Tenn., for the three-day championship. Despite the fact he was not pleased with their performance, Hull said it was a great experience and a great week.

The crew team received the invitation to the championship after submitting scores from six different tests, times during competition, recommendations from coaches and their competition record.

Hull said in the race the team had a bad start, which he likened to a hurdler tripping over the first hurdle, and it was tough to catch up against that type of competition.

The competition included the Canadian National Team, and teams from Princeton, the New York Athletic Club, the Malta Developmental Center and two teams from the Augusta Developmental Center.

"Those are national level teams that were competing for spots on the national team, which would allow them to compete at the international level,"

The crew team practiced this summer at 5:30 a.m. at Shawnee Lake in Topeka in preparation for the championship. Expectations were high.

"It gets kind of old getting up to practice every morning, but we are very dedicated to reaching our goal of Sydney 2000," Margheim said of the team's Olympic aspirations.

He got his first shot at officiating in high school, when he refereed youth basketball games. Now, he's in his third season as a baseball and softball umpire.

On Tuesday, he umpired three games in the Pluto Softball City League, a league for fourth-grade girls, in the 103-degree sun. There was a 10-minute break between the three games, but the temperature did not drop below 97 during the evening. "It gets hot," he said. "But it never gets tiring.

Tuesday was pretty much business as usual. Nothing too eventful, except that one coach disagreed about a rule. During a Pluto League game between the Pepperoni Lovers and the Supremes, there was a disputed call regarding a catcher blocking the plate.

The coach argued the rules, but Gibson set him straight on the letter of the law, and the game continued.

"It's always funny when the coaches think you're wrong, and then they say, 'Oh, I'm gonna go check the rules,'" Gibson said. "But they never come back."

However, before the rules were questioned, Gibson had other, more important, business to take care of. During the play, a Supremes baserunner crashed into the catcher. The collision knocked the wind out of the runner, giving her breathing problems and two eyes full of tears.

Gibson immediately called time, and made sure she was all right. Once she was smiling again, he proceeded to teach the Supremes' coach the rules involving blocking the plate. While dealing with coaches can be a chore, Gibson said his

Why did Tyson try to charge after

I'll just get straight to the point.

The so-called Mike Tyson-Evander Holyfield fight last Saturday night was fixed. Fixed like a spayed Saint Bernard.

Everybody's got questions, and I've got all the answers. These are only my opinions, but I'm a pretty smart guy, and I've never been wrong before.

Why did Tyson's camp insist that Mills Lane referee the fight?

Because the fix would be obvious if 29-yearold Mitch Halpern stopped the fight. Old Man Mills fits the role of Mr. Strict much better Wasn't Tyson physically outmatched by a bigger, stronger Holyfield?

No. A year ago, Tyson easily destroyed Frank Bruno, a fighter who is taller, stronger and heav-

No. While it looked like Holyfield was destroying him, he only landed two good hooks and some jabs during the first two rounds. Tyson connected with more power punches than

What about the worker who found the missing piece after the fight?

It's not true. It's all hype and propaganda. Do you really think the little piece of flesh was still there after all that commotion?

What caused Mills Lane to change his mind and not cancel the fight? An official came up to the ring and asked Lane twice if he was "really going to cancel the fight," a subtle "not yet" hint. Lane almost said his lines too early. But that's OK - he only had a

How does this affect the fighters' images? Perfectly.

STEWART'S DEATH HARKENS BACK ON A WONDERFUL LIFE

Jimmy Stewart, legendary star of such movies as "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," died Wednesday at his home in Beverly Hills from cardioc arrest. He was 89 years old.

'Men in Black' provides fun, frisky frolic

Movie Review

Last year Will Smith was saving the planet as we know it from an alien invasion force in "Independence Day." This year he's teamed up with Tommy Lee Jones in "Men In Black," a well-crafted summer release that takes advantage of two of the most underrated actors in Hollywood today.

Oscar- and Emmy-winner Jones brings sparkle to his performance as "K," a charter member of the Men in Black, well-versed in extraterrestrial politics and alien biology. Grammy-winner Smith is irrepressible as James Edwards, an NYPD officer who's just discovered that we are not alone in the universe - or on Manhattan Island, for that matter.

K plays the mentor to Edwards, introducing him to the clandestine organization, its means and methods, even as he is gearing up to save the planet from yet another ultimatum, and threats of planetary destruction.

Director Barry Sonnenfeld, who helmed such box office treats as the "Addams Family" movies and "Get Shorty" makes what could be a dark, brooding movie into a carnival walk of fun and mayhem. From the "it was futuristic in 1957" architecture of MiB headquarters to the retro-science of K's sidearm, the technical design lends an air of super-technology beyond the point of skepticism. There's no physics nitpicking, or "how could that do that" questions. This film refuses to take itself too seriously, so why should the view-

As the film builds to its climax, neither Jones nor Rip Torn, playing the MiB chief "Zed," sweat the approaching deadline for planetary annihilation. There is an air of "been there, done that" mentality about the MiB veterans, which makes Smith's wide-eyed approach to a universe of talking dogs, marble-sized universes and memorywiping devices very satisfying.

It's easy to dismiss Smith as just the Fresh Prince (and ignore his success in "Independence Day" as a blockbuster fluke), but "Six Degrees of Separation" showed a Smith with formidable acting talent. Smith does not draw on all of that potential in this film, but he doesn't need to. It would appear Smith himself is having as much fun as his character, Edwards, is.

Jones breathes dimension into the shell of K, making his scenes of introspection definite moments in the film. They aren't as roll-over funny as the monitor display of all known aliens on Earth (Sylvester Stallone and Newt Gingrich are just two of a few), but they are some of the more poignant moments of humanity in a film filled with otherworldly mayhem.

Vincent D'Onofrio is at his best as the cockroach-like alien whose stolen skin isn't quite on correctly, and Siobhan Fallon, as the wife of the skin in question, does a "Fargo"-esque deadpan delivery of her "husband's" bizarre behavior.

While the first half of the movie is greatly expository, detailing this hidden world of interstellar immigration and exploring the hierarchy of the MiB, this exposition is the most fascinating part of the movie. Despite K's tour and initiation of Edwards, there is the feeling even after seven hours of such revelation, there would still be room for discovery in the halls of the organization.

Particularly notable is the cosmic equivalent of LaGuardia Airport, where Earth's interstellar traffic congregates in a scene that makes the "Star Wars" cantina scene look like an Al Gore family portrait. There isn't the hint of danger or tension as in the Lucas epic, but instead the awareness that, as K puts it, most of them just toward the single card." Kansas law, as quoted in the suit, requires all contracts made by any state agency be awarded to the lowest responsible bidder. The request for bids was submitted by K-State on April 8, 1996. Commerce, FirstBank and UMB all placed bids. UMB is not filing a suit.

Sprong said the card system would require holders to create accounts with Commerce Bank. Commerce would receive all the interest on funds deposited in the accounts, along with transaction fees and could offer additional services to cardholders, he said.

FirstBank is the lowest responsible bidder, because its plan doesn't include all these expenses, according to the suit. The University consulted Bill Norwood, who worked with Florida

State University on a similar plan. Sprong said Norwood didn't receive payment from the University. However, in a letter addressed to Jack Sills, associate director of the K-State Student Union, Norwood said he would be accepting a position with Cybermark, one of Commerce Bank's Kansas City business partners.

The University also had private meetings as early as 1994 with Commerce Bank officials about a new card system, according to the suit.

FirstBank officials contacted K-State about the meetings. They were assured by the University that the decision to name Commerce as partner had not been made.

Commerce Bank was chosen.

The suit asks that the Total Campus Card operation be shut down and the bidding process redone. FirstBank will be represented by Michael Davis and Daniel Crabtree, of Overland Park.

"Please understand that the bank isn't demanding that they get the contract if they win," Crabtree said. "They just want the University to follow the law."

Richard Seaton, University attorney, is also chairman of the FirstBank board of directors, and will not be representing the University. Deputy Attorney General John Campbell will be lead counsel, Krause said.

Riley County District Court Judge Meryl Wilson will preside.

The court hasn't blocked Commerce Bank from setting up in the Union, Krause said, so the plan to include the bank hasn't changed.

"If we don't get some rain, I don't think it will come back as quick as it did last year. The thing we really get scared about every year is if we would get a big rainstorm during Stampede with all of those cars and vehicles in there," Wurst said.

Wurst said he thought workers at Stampede did a good job picking up trash after the festival was over. However, he would like to see more environmentally-friendly products used to curb the amount of solid waste.

"It's a philosophical question whether something like this should be going on in a public park. I don't know yet how I stand on it. Some people think that parks should just be for wildlife and nature, and some people think parks should be for the people. I can see both sides, so I come down squarely on the fence." he said.

Rick Boatman, Country Stampede grounds and maintenance manager, said the cleanup was going well although some of the help left after the festival was over.

"This turf will come out of it if we get some rain. Other than that, we leave it just the way we found it. We were very fortunate last year. The rain came afterwards, and things grew back up. The park didn't look too bad by the end of the summer." Boatman said.

Boatman said he didn't receive any complaints from the park last year after the cleanup. He said the park was satisfied with the job.

"We'll just try to get it as clean as we did last year and that will give us a rule of thumb," he said. The amount of trash from this year's Stampede exceeded the estimated amount, Boatman said.

"We figured that we'd be able to put 20- and 40-yard dumpsters out here and be able to do the whole show, but we didn't get through the first day," he said.

To help remedy the trash problem next year, Stampede will place 40-yard dumpsters with trash compactors at a couple of different locations around the park, Boatman said.

Besides more trash, the stage was also heavier this year, Boatman said.

"It took a lot longer to get the stage crew out of here this year than it did last year. It was a smaller stage, and it was lighter. It was all aluminum. This one is an iron stage and it's chewing up my stagehand boys pretty bad," Boatman said.

By Thursday, the cleanup should be complete, Boatman said. This includes returning all the trash barrels and picnic tables back to their usual places.

"We pulled them from all over the park, and now we have to put them all back. We'll have everything complete before dark on Thursday," Boatman said.

Mombasa also sells lemonade, which Wilson said is not made like other lemon-

"We sell lemonade, but we don't use sugar. We sweeten it with apples," she said.

Mombasa also sells an unusual product - the Wheatgrass Shooter. It is popular with some customers because of the boost in energy it gives them. A Shooter is made by juicing the sprouting grass of red winter wheat berries. Wilson said the juice from wheatgrass is so nutrient rich that one pound equals 23 pounds of garden vegetables. Wheatgrass helps the body with digestion, detoxification, tissue repair, skin problems, healing and the prevention of degenerative diseases, Wilson said.

Wilson added that for some people Mombasa drinks can replace a meal, because they are getting all of their vitamins and minerals in one drink, he said.

Wilson said her mother, who lives in California, owns the store.

Wilson said although juice stores are just getting started in Kansas, Mombasa hopes to someday expand into other states in the Midwest including Nebraska and Oklahoma.

Danny Elfman, who has crafted numerous musical scores including "Batman" and "The Nightmare Before Christmas," lends his distinctive touch to the movie, from a light and airy opening sequence to a "Dragnet"-esque MiB theme for K and Edwards.

Sonnenfeld makes what could have been a dark and dreary conspiracy-flick into a fun-filled tour through an almost magical secret world living under the veneer of safety and mundane atmosphere on our planet. This film is much closer to "The Addams Family" or "Mars Attacks!" than "Independence

For a dark and dreary action, try "Face/Off." For a few action sequences with a smile and twinkle in its eye, don't look any further than the near-future world of "Men In Black."

NCAA committee puts women's basketball on probation

SAM FELSENFELD

The K-State women's basketball program received a two-year probation from the NCAA Committee on Infractions Thursday for nine rule violations in 1994 and 1995.

During the probationary period, the University must submit reports about the program's compliance with regulations, and the program may not conduct any satellite summer camps. No studentathletes may be employed at women's basketball summer camps, and K-State must conduct an annual audit of all of its summer camps to ensure compliance with NCAA rules.

However, the probation will not have any effect on potential post-season play.

This comes after the University selfimposed several penalties for the violations. However, Athletic Director Max Urick said the probation is a fairly standard procedure and shouldn't affect the team on the court. He also said the self-imposed penalties were the most difficult to deal with.

He said the decision handed down from the NCAA effectively accepts the University's internal investigations and corrective measures, and that no further action will be taken if K-State follows the terms of the probation.

"This isn't anything new. It's old news," he said. "It's just bringing this matter to closure." Coach Deb Patterson, who took control of the women's team in 1996, agreed.

"This gives us a clean slate without any hindrances. We're really pleased with the findings," she said. "The NCAA has put a stamp of approval on our self-imposed sanctions."

The violations, which led to former coach Brian Agler's eventual suspension, reassignment and resignation, occurred during the summers of 1994 and 1995.

"I wish he would have read his mail and followed the rules," Urick said. "But that's all water under the bridge, and we're not going to look back." The violations led the Athletic Department to look closer at the situation.

"At the time we found out about this, we conducted an investigation, kept the NCAA informed, and took corrective measures," Urick

Following Agler's reassignment, Jack Hartman was named interim coach. After the season, a search for a new coach turned up Patterson, who took over the team and guided it to a berth in the NCAA tournament.

Patterson said a one-year loss of two scholarships could devastate a program, but fortunately for the Wildcats, there were enough returning players to strengthen the penaltystricken team

"I don't think it affected the team, but it affected the program," she said. "However, it could have had a much bigger effect."

Regardless, she's happy to have the scholarships and full practice time back.

"I think it certainly is great to be on the same footing as everybody else in the country now," she said.

Urick agreed.

"It's good to be back to a level playing field now," he said.

Patterson also said she doesn't expect to experience any problems from this in the future.

That's the good thing," she said. "When I say I think this has been put to bed, I really think this is behind us."

THE VIOLATIONS

- Employing recruits
- · Paying an enrolled student-athlete an excessive salary
- Unauthorized employment of enrolled student athletes · Providing unauthorized housing and meals to recruits
- Unauthorized observation and participation of recruit practices
- Improper off-campus recruiting
- · Failure to monitor summer camps
- Providing extra benefits to student athletes
- Holding excessive practices.

THE AFTERMATH OF THE INVESTIGATION

- Suspension and resignation of Agler
- · No contract offers for Agler's coaching staff
- Preseason practice shortened by one week
- Conference and non-conference victories forfeited in 1995-96 season
- Team scholarships reduced by two for 1996-97 season

TCI, K-State discuss possible joint project

NEW CABLE SYSTEM COULD CONNECT ENTIRE

An unified cable system could connect the K-State campus to educational advances by fall 1998.

A joint agreement between K-State Telecommunications and TCI of Kansas will construct a cable system on campus that will reach every building, allowing it to generate and receive programming.

"We can mutually help each other, and that's what we're going to do," Fred Damkroger, director of Telecommunications, said.

Meetings with TCI were to discuss what services would be included in the project. "We've been studying a number of other universities like Duke, Boston College and Missouri, that do quite a bit of this," Damkroger said. The proposed system would originate from the campus power plant and be directed to all the buildings, so it could be administered in one place. The University would tape events like the Landon Lecture Series through the Educational Communication Center on campus. TCI would be able to get a copy through Telecommunications to run on its regular ser-

Class reviews, lectures and presentations could be aired at different times to fit the needs of the students. "It would be much like Channel 19 is right now,"

Spencer Smith, Telecommunications network administrator, said. Possibly two or three more channels could be added as time goes on, Smith said.

International language programming has been a large area of interest in the new cable system, Damkroger said.

Bradley Shaw, associate professor in modern languages said the new system had advantages. The proposed cable system would allow all rooms in Eisenhower to show foreign broadcasts. The modern language department in Eisenhower Hall currently picks up its foreign broadcasts through its satellite dish on the roof of Throckmorton Hall. Foreign broadcasts are received in the Language Learning Center in Eisenhower 01 now. The center is the only room that can show the broadcasts, Shaw said. Broadcasts are currently set on one signal. Changing signals to get different programs is difficult, Shaw said.

"We'll be able to show news programs in many languages," he said. "The students would have more variety of programs."

an Olewnik's business card refers to him as a wood worker, but masterful artist seems more accurate.

Olewnik has been building furniture for 12 years and has developed a talent and love for his work that shows in the products he builds.

'It takes a lot from the eye and hand and heart to be an artist," he said. "Just like any artist, no matter the medium, it shows in the work that comes out.

Olewnik has been in the Manhattan area for 22 years. He used to work in a Ford Motor Co. factory but decided one day that he didn't want to work at for the rest of his life

"I made the decision and got a job as a carpenter, framing houses and such," he said. "I've been in construction ever since."

Olewnik works out of a converted chicken house behind his home south of Manhattan. The shop is only 30-feet long, and some of his projects fill the room. He is the only employee and plans to keep it like that.

"People tell me to hire additional help, but I can't do it. I'd lose something from the piece."

Olewnik builds a wide range of products. including sculptures, desks, chairs, staircases, doors, cabinets, conference tables and much

"The only thing I don't do is refinish or repair furniture," he said. "When I do something, I want to do it right. And usually the repair cost is as much as a whole new piece would be.' Olewnik mostly constructs furniture but does create a few sculptures. He said he enjoys sculpting but doesn't have the time. "You have to be persistent to just keep at it," he said. "I really love the work I do and learning it. Once you know it, you have to keep enthusiasm and love of doing it."

Some of Olewnik's work includes difficult techniques. For example, a set of chairs he built was made from steam-bent wood. To bend the Former Kansas governor undergoes emergency surgery

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Former Kansas Gov. Robert F. Bennett suffered a stomach aneurysm Saturday and underwent emergency surgery at St. Joseph Health Center.

He was in fair condition late Saturday, a hospital spokesman said.

Bennett, 70, of Overland Park, served as the 39th governor of Kansas from 1975 to 1979. He was a state senator for 10 years and was the first president of the Kansas Senate in 1973-75, following adoption of a constitutional amendment eliminating the lieutenant governor as president.

Bennett was awarded the Kansas Supreme Court's Justice Award in May, which recognizes those who have made significant contributions to the administration of justice in Bennett founded the law firm Bennett Lytle Wetzler Martin & Pishny, which serves many Johnson County government entities.

Earlier this year, Bennett headed a mediation panel that reviewed whether a committee of businessmen should hold open meetings on the redevelopment of Union Station in Kansas City. The panel recommended that the meetings be open because taxpayer dollars were being

One other man also was killed in that blast during a holiday weekend that was marred by fireworks accidents.

The bodies, found near the barge where a fireworks show blew up Thursday at Alton, Ill., were identified as Ralph Duty, 44, and Raymound Hernandez, 24, both of Chicago.

The two fireworks-display technicians apparently drowned after the explosion threw them into the water, Madison County deputy coroner Robert Lewis said.

Another technician, Rick Cisneros, 45, died on the barge.

Duty's wife and Cisneros' niece, Rosemary, said she had pleaded with her husband to take precautions, but he claimed everything was

Authorities said the explosion occurred when an 8-inch shell fired from the barge exploded just a few feet in the air, what's known as a "low blow."

The show was put on by Mad Bomber Fireworks Productions of Plymouth, Ind., which also staged a show that was interrupted by an explosion Friday at Syracuse, Ind. A 2-year-old and two adults suffered minor injuries.

Mad Bomber co-owner Mike Horvath refused to comment on the accidents Saturday.

Bloody battle begins in Cambodia coup attempt

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia - Weeks of rising tensions and isolated clashes erupted into a bloody mortar and rocket battle in the capital Saturday when one of Cambodia's feuding prime ministers attacked the other's forces in an apparent coup.

Mexican election could end 6 decades of government

MEXICO CITY - Mexico's way of government for the past six decades is under assault in Sunday's national election.

Polls show the Institutional Revolutionary Party could lose control of Congress for the first time ever. More remarkably, increasing numbers of Mexicans think it would accept that defeat.

Since it was founded in 1929, the party's grip on the country has been so strong that Peruvian novelist Mario Vargas Llosa called it "the perfect dictatorship," a quip sometimes repeated by the party's critics.

But frustration over the ailing economy and increasingly democratic elections have eroded the party's previous hold on power.

'A regime of a basically authoritarian cut is being left behind," said Juan Antonio Garcia Vega, secretary-general of the National Action

THE NEW FRONTER

Pathfinder mission to mars

On July 4 Mars Pathfinder crashed to the surface of Mars. Its objective is to explore the red planet.

The Pathfinder blasted into Mars atmosphere and then used airbags and rocket engines to decelerate

Sojoourner, a small rover, then leaves the Pathfinder to conduct soil samples of Mars

ASADENA, Calif. - The Mars rover Sojourner was headed for a lumpy boulder nicknamed "Barnacle Bill"on Sunday among a field of diverse rocks that had scientists ecstatic with prospects of unraveling the planet's puzzles.

"She is the robotic equivalent of Neil Armstrong on Mars,"rover scientist Henry Moore said. "She's your field geologist, and she wants to thank the people of the United States and all foreign contributors paying for her."

Mission scientists treat the foot-high Sojourner, which has a 3-D camera and an instrument designed to chemically analyze the martian surface, as if it were

Between its instruments and images taken by the lander's camera, scientists can sense the martian environment better

"We have the perfect site, the perfect spacecraft, the perfect instruments and the perfect rover," project scientist Matthew Golombek said.

On Sunday afternoon, hours after it rolled down a ramp from the Mars Pathfinder lander, Sojourner sat just beyond the ramp, at the end of a distinct pair of tracks in the red dust.

From studying the tracks, geologists said the surface seemed like a thin dusting of flour over a harder layer.

By day's end, Sojourner was expected to have completed a 90-degree counterclockwise rotation, then backed up a few inches to put its alpha proton X-ray spectrometer in contact with Barnacle Bill, a bumpy rock about the size of the rover.

Analysis of its chemical elements would follow to figure out what minerals are in the rock. The ultimate goal - to understand the geologic history of the landing site - will take years of scientif-

'The full story isn't going to emerge in a short period of time, but we really have the tools to do the job now,"

University of Arizona geologist Ron Greeley said.

Communications with Pathfinder are not continuous because radio signals can't reach the spacecraft while it is on the opposite side of Mars from Earth. Because the martian day is slightly longer than 24 hours, communications happen roughly on a 12-hour on, 12-hour off schedule.

As the mission continues, the 12-hour on period gets later and later. It now extends from early afternoon to a few hours after midnight.

A week from now, mission controllers will find themselves up all night.

Geologists said they couldn't have been happier with the landing site, a mostly flat plain studded with rocks and boulders, thought to have washed down from distant highlands in violent floods billions of years ago.

On the horizon are hills with horizontal colored bands - the fingerprint of liquid water.

"We really wanted to see the geologic diversity of Mars, and we have not been disappointed,"Greeley said.

Mars is thought to have had water, a vital component of life, on its surface billions of years ago. That water could have been lost to space, or it could still be on Mars today, frozen underground and in the polar caps.

'Mars may even be more water-rich than Earth is. We really don't know,"Golombek said.

The site is so varied, with distinctive ills and a small crater less than a mile away, that scientists have already figured out exactly where the craft is on Mars. When the Viking missions went to Mars in 1976, it took a year to figure out where one of the spacecraft landed. The position of the other was never accurately deter-

Scientists presented the first panoramic photograph of the Pathfinder site Saturday, a black-and-white 360degree view that can be accessed through Internet sites.

Internet sites were being added as NASA's got swamped.

By Sunday morning, those computers had received more than 100 million hits. Pathfinder was about to become the biggest Internet event in history, Golombek said.

The lander's camera mast was extended to full height early Sunday and subsequent photographs were expected to be full-color and more detailed.

Already. mission scientists were beginning to do field geology from a distance of 120 million miles. A light-colored vertical mark on a hillside could be an avalanche gully, Greeley said.

Horizontal features on another hill could be terraces cut by moving water, horizontal rock layers laid down in a lake or a bathtub ringlike feature left along an ancient shoreline.

These all are indicators of water activity,"Greeley said.

Scientists also provided a weather report from Mars. Pathfinder's meteorological equipment was having some problems but did return noontime conditions from the first two days of the mission. Temperatures hovered around zero degrees Fahrenheit, with light breezes that occasionally caused them to dip as low as 25-below.

"It's better than what people are used to in the northern United States in the fall and in the winter,"said Peter Smith, a University of Arizona professor who heads the lander camera team.

Area code to switch to 785 in mid-July

RENE EICHEM

People dialing a Kansas phone number will need to start dialing 785 as the area code for most calls that used to be 913 beginning July 20.

The new 785 area code will serve the northern half of Kansas, including Manhattan, Lawrence and Topeka. Kansas City and surrounding areas will retain the 913 area code. The 316 area code for southern Kansas will remain unchanged.

"The reason Kansas City and those areas got to keep the 913 area code was because eastern 913 and 816 are the two local area codes in the greater Kansas City area," Harry Watts, external affairs representative for Southwestern Bell, said. "There would have been a lot of change for them because of local service across the state boundary.

The 913 area code is being split because available telephone numbers are running out, due to increased use of cellular phones, pagers, modems, fax machines and Internet. More phone numbers are also being given to competitors entering the telecommunications market because of industry deregulation.

Without the change, it is estimated that available phone numbers in the 913 area would be gone by October 1998

Callers will be able to use either 913 or 785 area codes to reach people in the current 913 area until Oct. 1, 1998.

Callers who dial the wrong area code after the transitional period will hear a recorded message that explains the area code has changed to 785. Watts said the recording will be effect from Oct. 1 to Dec.

Kansas businesses will need to make necessary changes to company letterhead, advertising and promotional materials and business cards to reflect the new area code.

K-State personnel were notified of the change in the area code. Departments can use existing stationery and business cards printed with the 913 area code until October 1, 1998.

Businesses in the Manhattan area will also need to update their printed materials to reflect the

"Our cards will have to be redone," Eileen Meyer, manager of Streetside Records, said. "Although I will more than likely just scratch out the old area code and write the new code on everything until we need to order new stuff. I don't want to waste paper

"From here on out," she continued, "we'll definitely amend everything. Our computers will have to be changed, too. Change is good though."

Rich Shermoen, business manager at Dick Edwards Ford, said they won't order new business cards or letterhead until around the first of the year.

"We'll probably start making the change on all future orders," Shermoen said. "I don't think this change will have a significant impact at all. You can use both area codes for a while - long enough for people to get used to it. It's happening all over the country. It's a necessary change.

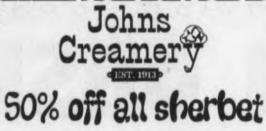

People who use options such as voice dial, speed dial, call forwarding and auto dial will also need to reprogram their telephone equipment and fax machines. Telephone logs and auto-dial features in computers will also have to be changed to reflect the new area code.

K-State women's basketball team probation wasted sentence ast week, the K-State women's basketball team was put on probation by the NCAA for rules violations in 1994 and 1995.

The two-year probationary period seems like a wasted sentence considering one of the main culprits for these violations is now coaching the ABL's Columbus Quest.

Brian Agler, who was K-State women's basketball coach for more than two seasons, resigned during an investigation into NCAA violations in February 1996.

players and coaches in check. Large amounts of money are poured into collegiate sports, and rules need to be in place in order to control that

In this case, the system didn't work. NCAA rules don't allow past coaches to be penalized for their activities at a university.

There were nine NCAA rule violations made during the years Agler coached at K-State. A partial list of these violations includes employing recruits, paying an enrolled studentbenefits to student-athletes and holding excessive practices.

According to information from the NCAA, Agler is responsible for the violations. But students who accepted money during recruiting are also at fault. Students and faculty knew there were NCAA violations, but chose not to do the right thing in reporting those violations.

An internal investigation was done, which resulted in self-imposed penalties - practice was shortened by one week at the start of the 1996

NCAA rules are made and enforced to keep athlete an excessive salary, providing extra season, non-conference wins were forfeited during 1995-96 season and two scholarships were taken away from the team for the 1996-97 season. Also, members of Agler's coaching staff were not allowed to renew their contracts.

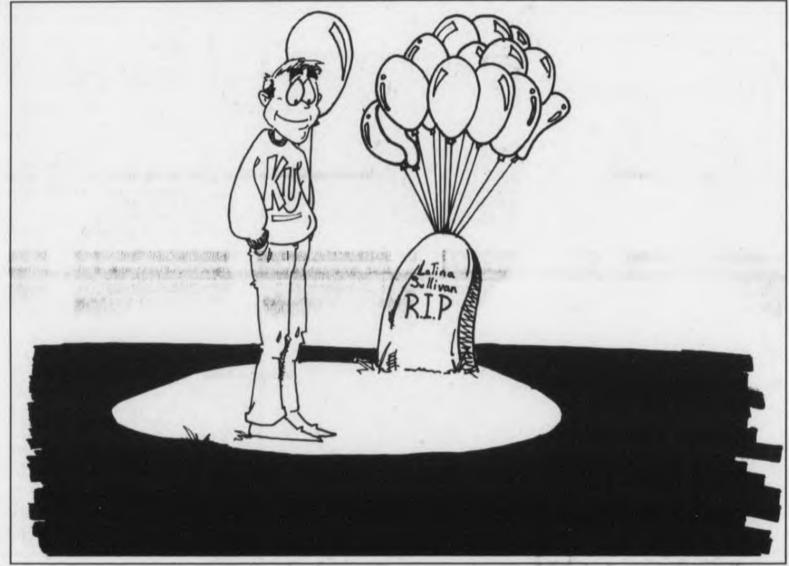

> The fact remains that Agler is still in the coaching system, and will not feel the affects of the probation period, or the penalties of the internal investigation. NCAA rules will not work until coaches like Agler are held responsible for their actions, whether or not they are still at the university where the violations were made.

JOURNALIST'S DEATH TEACHES US TO Celebrate what we have BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE

SHANE FOSBURG/Collegion

everal weeks ago, the University Daily Kansan finished production on a Wednesday issue. Its design editor, Bryan Volk, and its editor-in-chief, LaTina Sullivan, dropped it off to the press and made their way home. It wasn't anything significant - just another workday done, and another was on the way.

That next day never arrived for Sullivan, and she never got home.

That morning, the shockwaves started in Lawrence and rippled across the state. It wasn't just that Sullivan was the editorin-chief of the paper, nor that she was a good columnist, though she certainly was both. It wasn't that she was active in her sorority or that she was prospering on a campus far from her home in Memphis,

What shook up the region were the two cruelest facts - that she fell victim to something as mundane as asthma, and that she was - the old cliche again - so

I was privileged to be part of the K-State contingent to attend Sullivan's memorial service, even though the experience was more than a little uncomfortable.

First of all, nobody likes being reminded of their own mortality, and Sullivan's passing from something as trivial as asthma seemed all the more arbitrary and unnecessary. The worst part of the trip was that our group was by far the least fortunate of all those there to pay tribute to Sullivan, because we never got a chance to know her.

For each person who rose to speak or sing in her memory, there were memories to be honored and a tangible affection that sometimes pulled too hard on the speaker's heart and caught the words before they could escape. The atmosphere wasn't one of loss, but of celebration of the life of a friend

The service was a learning lesson, for me if for nobody else. Sullivan's life may have ended before it had to, but the time lived doesn't matter as much as how that time is spent.

Sullivan had an obvious effect on those close to her, moreso than many people that lived to three times her age. She realized goals loftier than many adults by working on a newspaper she valued highly, with people she treasured, and eventually taking its helm for the summer.

So it didn't last forever - what does? Never let the illusion of time lost lend sense of life wasted. The antithesis of death is not living forever, but living now.

If all you remember about Ryan White is his death, then you neglect all the lessons his life served to teach, and that's a greater disservice than forgetting he ever existed.

White's survival and struggle for acceptance in an ignorant and intolerant society showed us much more about ourselves than we wanted to see, to his credit and our shame. To a nation which had just dealt with a disease by assigning it a convenient stereotype, White shattered that notion and reminded America that they were not dealing with a stereotype, but a disease with real effects on real people.

There are a lot of lessons we can take from the passage of people who are as inspirational in life as Sullivan and White. Those at Sullivan's service celebrated her transition from an all-toophysical world to a more spiritual existence Even if you don't subscribe to such theories, you cannot escape the realization that Sullivan exists in the minds of others in a place that cannot be touched, in a part of the mind that will be forever aware not just of her absence but of the knowledge that yes, she was here - for a time. It's an indelible mark we are each capable of leaving on another for better or worse.

KEN WELLS is a senior in comput er science. You can send e-mail to Ken at (sigma70ksv.edu)

Still, I think it's important to recognize the effect that people, even sometimes ourselves, have on others. It's hard to acknowledge that pull that we have on others, or others on us, until that tie has been severed, by one means or another. We, either the departed or the abandoned, will find time enough to mourn the loss. We just need to ensure we celebrate what we have.

No party lasts forever, but that doesn't mean we can't rock the place while we can. Carpe boyum.

RECENT MEDIA FOCUS HAS CREATED AN ALIEN OBSESSION

Take me to your leader.

ttspu@ksu edul

The little green men are coming.

Well, we have pretty much moved past the idea that aliens would have to be green. But UFOs and conspiracy theories about aliens are everywhere. America seems to have an obsession with aliens. And it is evident that these supposed aliens are everywhere. So just exactly where are the aliens? They may even be in your home or sitting next to you on the bus. I would be willing to bet that you probably have seen one of these aliens today on a T-shirt, cartoon, baseball cap or key chain. The thought of creatures from outer space has inspired a sense of wondering about what's out there. With that comes the question, "Are they coming for us?"

VIEWPOINT They have definitely come to the local book store, movie theater and video store. Just go by one of these places and you are sure to find some sort of book or film with life forms that are not native to the planet Earth.

Many movies and books have SPÜRGIN been inspired by the idea that something else is out there. Some friendly beings, some beings who want to destroy us. These movies even appeared before humans had made it to space and the moon - just the imagination of what could be out there or coming to take over.

Creative geniuses have envisioned creatures from another world as friendly, while others see aliens as invaders, coming to destroy us. Some Hollywood portrayals of out-of-thisworld life has been friendly — like E.T. He just wanted to phone home. Remember Mr. Spock? He was part Vulcan and hence part alien, but that would be logical. Yoda, may the force be with him, was definitely not an earthling. Remember, that whole story took place long ago in a galaxy

And there have been others, such as Marvin the Martian. who were always trying to blow up the Earth. Then there were the invaders from "Independence Day" who just wanted to destroy all the humans.

Even more of America's obsession with aliens will be shown this summer in New Mexico. This month marks the 50th anniversary of the supposed UFO crash in Roswell, N.M., and some 50,000 to 100,000 travelers (earthlings, not creatures from space) are expected to flock to this town for this golden event. But was there really a crash there? The town of Roswell has made a lot of money off the UFO enthusiasts who have made the pilgrimage to their town.

But is all this excitement over aliens just a fad? Now programs like "Unsolved Mysteries" and "X-Files" promote this unexplained material even more. Showing alien abductions, UFO sightings and the possibility of government cover-up are only a few of the many ways these shows promote the idea of

There have been eyewitness accounts of aliens and crashes. And there was even an alien autopsy video, supposedly. But the government denies all claims of a crash.

Yet a few weeks ago the government released documents that said what was seen in Roswell were really just dummies used to test parachutes. They also have claimed the crash in Roswell was a weather balloon, a NASA test craft and a plane crash that killed 11 men, possibly accounting for Army autop-

Last week, "Men in Black" opened in theaters, propelling the alien phenomenon even further and continuing the idea that secret government agents are not telling the public everything about what is out there, or what may be among us.

So if there is a government cover-up, are there really men in black who keep the government's secret on UFOs and do they really wear those RayBan sunglasses?

Are there really aliens among us, besides the T-shirts and paraphernalia? Are the men in black keeping tabs on them, and will you be the next to be abducted by the aliens and have all sorts of tests performed on you? And should the government be keeping information about aliens from us?

Americans have this strange obsession with aliens. But is this unreasonable to understand? It isn't crazy to consider that we are not alone in the universe.

Are there aliens out there? Are they among us? Are they hostile, are they peaceful? Someday hopefully we will know

To quote The X-Files, "The truth is out there."

at the Western Open. Though Woods drew gasps from the overflow crowds with some 320-yard-plus drives, it was the three straight birdies on par-3s Sunday that really lifted him to his fourth title of the year and sixth in 21 events since turning pro

After hitting a tee shot within a foot on the last of Cog Hill Dubsdread's par-3s, the 165yard 14th, Woods seemed almost embarrassed. The 21-year-old reacted to the fans' roars by smiling sheepishly and shrugging. Woods then tapped in for his third 2 to take the lead for good at 12-under.

"That was like a knife in the back when he made 2 there," said Frank Nobilo of New Zealand, who had very briefly pulled into a tie for the lead. "When he's in a position to win, he hardly ever goes backward."

Woods said he may have won it at the par-3s. He played them 3-under for the day. He played the four par-5s in 2-under.

Woods finished with a 13-under 275, three strokes ahead of Nobilo and four better than Justin Leonard, Steve Lowery and Jeff Sluman.

As he walked to the 18th green after putting his second shot safely on, the gallery burst through the ropes and followed him up the fairway, a scene common at the British Open but very rare in the United States.

The $360,000 winner's share in the Motorola-sponsored tournament gave Woods $1,761,033 in earnings this season. Only a huge slump will keep him from becoming the first golfer ever to earn $2 million in a season. As it is, he's less than $20,000 behind the earnings record Tom Lehman set last year.

Woods is the second-youngest person in the history of pro golf to reach six victories. Horton Smith, who played in the 1920s, had seven before he turned 21.

And four wins in 13 starts this year puts Woods in the company of some all-time greats. Jack Nicklaus won seven of 18 in 1973, and Jimmy Demaret six of 12 in 1940. Ben Hogan had the best year ever, winning five of six WIMBLEDON, England Cedric Pioline tried to sound confident going into the Wimbledon final against Pete Sampras.

Pioline said.

Sampras won in a blowout Sunday, 6-4, 6-2, 6-4.

"He's not God," Pioline said afterward. Yes, Sampras is flesh and blood. He may also be the greatest tennis player of all time. At age 25, Sampras has four Wimbledon championships and 10 Grand Slam titles. He talks of playing for at least several more years, meaning he has an excellent chance to surpass Roy Emerson's record of 12 majors.

There is only one blemish on Sampras' résumé, and it looms larger as his trophy collection grows - He has never won the French Open.

Sampras has won the U.S. Open four times and the Australian Open twice. But unless and until he wins the only major played on clay, any claim that he's the greatest ever will be met with skepticism. And he knows it.

"Wimbledon is the biggest one we have in the game," Sampras said, "and the French is the one that has given me the problems. So it's a challenge for me to play well there."

Most recent top players retired with a similar gap in their record. Jimmy Connors and John McEnroe never won the French Open. Bjorn Borg never won the U.S. Open. Ivan Lendl never won Wimbledon, and his obsession with it may have cost him other Grand Slam titles

Rod Laver, by comparison, twice won all four majors in a single year. Emerson won each Grand Slam at least twice. Sampras has tried to downplay his troubles in Paris, sensing he would only put more pressure on himself.

His best shot at the French came in 1996, when he reached the semifinals for the first time before losing to eventual champion Yevgeny Kafelnikov.

Sampras had one of his worst clay-court seasons this year. He lost his first match in three consecutive events, then was upset in the third round at Paris by Sweden's Magnus Norman.

All-Star break provides baseball's non-Stars a break from diamond

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CLEVELAND - Tom Candiotti, Danny Darwin and Tim Belcher have totaled more than 400 wins in the majors, combining to work in excess of 7,000 innings during 45 seasons in the Still the three have never thrown a single pitch in an All-Star game.

"I think it'd be fun for everybody to have gone to an All-Star game at least once in their career. Unfortunately, it hasn't happened to me," said Candiotti, the Los Angeles knuckleballer.

"Overall, I am satisfied with my career. It sure would have been nice to have gone to an All-Star game. But sometimes they happen, sometimes they don't. In my case, it didn't." Candiotti is not alone in the category. While Detroit pitcher Justin Thompson and Pittsburgh second baseman Tony Womack are among a halfdozen players going to Tuesday night's All-Star game at Jacobs Field in their first full seasons in the majors, many others have waited a decade and never gotten the call. Hal Morris is a lifetime .300 hitter, Jim Eisenreich is near that mark and Tony Phillips has more than 1,800 hits in 16 seasons. Yet not a single All-Star at-bat for any of them.

"There are a lot of good first basemen out there," said Morris, who plays the position - without much power for Cincinnati.

Mark Lemke and Greg Gagne have plenty of World Series experience, but have missed out on the summer showcase. Same goes for Otis Nixon, even with more than 500 steals in 15 seasons.

Tim Salmon, with more than 130 home runs in less than six years, has been blanked. So have Walt Weiss and Mike Macfarlane, both in their 11th sea-

For some All-Star absentees, they've simply been blocked.

Gagne, with Los Angeles for his 15th and final season, spent most of his time in the AL, where Cal Ripken always started at shortstop. Ripken moved to third base this year, and Boston shortstop Nomar Garciaparra made the squad as a rookie.

Lemke, in his 10th season as Atlanta's second baseman, has lost out at a position that Ryne Sandberg and Craig Biggio have ruled for a decade. Of course, there's always hope.

Philadelphia ace Curt Schilling and Seattle second baseman Joey Cora both were picked for the first time this year, their 10th in the majors.

And remember - the likes of Scott Cooper, Tim Laudner, Kurt Stillwell, Vance Law and Jack Armstrong have been All Stars in the last 10 years.

On the other hand, big-name players such as Brett Butler, Juan Gonzalez, Jay Buhner, Jay Bell and Terry Pendleton have made it only once. While hitters often make the All-

All-Star time once again means a break instead of a game. "It's almost nice having the three days off," said Candiotti, with 130 wins in 14 seasons. "I think when you don't make it, you really put more of an importance on the fact that you really need the days off. But if you do make it, you say, 'Yeah, I really want to go.'

t would appear baseball is back in the national spotlight. The annual Major League All-Star Game is before us once again.

Although I once waited for this game with naked excitement, I now find myself burdened with the question of who really cares any more?

drives Gwynn hits is similar to watching a horse's tail swat flies. It's just boring. You just know Tony isn't going to strike out or hit a dinger.

Even if he did, I'd still scoff and yawn. Now that we're speaking of dingers, did I mention we have some guys playing this game who can flat-out bomb other countries when they hit the ball out

Mark McGwire, of the Oakland A's, has smashed 30 home runs so far this season. The kid up in Seattle, Ken Griffey Jr., has also hit 30. One of these guys may break Roger Maris' longstanding home-run record in a singleseason mark.

But what if they do? I find it difficult to believe any magic will surround the record being broken. What if McGwire breaks the record in Minnesota or Detroit? That 62nd home run ball is going to land in empty bleachers.

If the home-run is hit in one of baseball's downtrodden cities, I imagine more members of the media will be in attendance than fans.

Yes, my friends, baseball is a dying sport. I find it most unfortunate that they slit their own throats by canceling the World Series in that cold and bitter 1994 strike-ridden season.

People keep whispering over my shoulder that I'm wrong. They tell me Cal Ripken Jr. saved baseball by persevering beyond Lou Gehrig's consecutive game streak.

Yes, Ripken walked around the stadium that day shaking hands with many fans lucky enough to grab a field-side seat. But the next day when Ripken ran onto the field the fervor had already began to die down.

By the time Ripken took the field in Kansas City a few weeks later and broke the all-time professional consecutive game streak set by a Japanese player, it was just a footnote in the papers and on ESPN.

I'm sorry to say Ripken's streak was a wasted effort. Fortunately, enough of the players and management realized this, and they instituted a string of drastic changes to Last year we got to see real playoffs

This year the fans were given another gimmick to get them out to the ball yards - interleague play.

Although the baseball hierarchy would have you trust in the fact that the experiment was a success, I would have to disagree.

For every prime-time match up between the Yankees and the Braves we were blessed with, we were also handed a series between teams that just stink.

Does the Astros vs. the Royals ring any bells? These days I follow baseball for one reason - it's my job. I guess I'm just bitter. Baseball used me and abused me.

And I'm not going to become just another statistic. I'm not going back.

There has been a comic book and game store at 1205 Moro in Aggieville for the past 10 years.

The store is behind on its rent, and their landlord, Cheryl Ballard, wants it off her property, he said.

This could not have come at a worse time, he said. Summer is terrible for comic and game sales, he said, when the college crowd is not in town. What's more, the comic book industry runs in three-year cycles, he said. "We're right at the glut," he said.

"Between 1991 and 1993, comics were just the hottest thing. Let's say there were 3,000 comic book stores in 1990. By the end of 1992, there were 6,000.

"Now it's close to 2,500."

So rent is a problem, he said. In the past, it hasn't been a problem, but Elder points out that he's the sole employee, making $6 an hour. He isn't the owner. Thad Williams owns the store.

Williams bought the store two years ago from Royal Dowdy, who had owned the store, then called the Master Gamer, for eight years. Williams, who had been assistant manager under Dowdy, renamed it the Wyrd Raven.

Now Williams is missing, Elder said.

"The next day, she called and said she was sorry, but we had to go," he said.

The store features over 300 comic book titles, and deals new and used games. It also features two tables that gamers can play on. One sits just inside the front door. Elder said that's intentional.

'We go by the saying, 'What you play sells," he said. "These guys are my advertising. When you consider a game that needs 100, 200 figures to play, and that a pack of two figures costs $6.50, we only need to get two or three new players a week.

Elder said gamers only need to tell him when they want to use the table, and he'll have it ready. Most people don't have a table big enough, he said. The regular gamers will come in, on average, three to four times a week, play two different games with one to five other people for two to three hours a sitting, he said.

New gamers are shown how the game is played, he said.

New comics come in on Wednesdays, he said, straight from the printers. The comic collectors who come in every week to buy the new titles are fifty percent of Elder's business, he said.

A few of the regulars are trusted to help Elder, even run the cash register, he said. Wendy Slate and John Pickle are just two who would come in anyway, but help out a little more when they can just so the store would stay in business, he said.

"They're invaluable, a big, big, big help," he said

A whole subculture of Manhattan residents depend on the store, since there's only one other card shop and one other comic book store. If it shut down, they'd go to Topeka or Junction City, he said.

The regulars have told me that they're willing to follow me wherever I go," he said. Ballard had no comment on the situation.

"I don't think it's anyone else's business," she said. "It's between me and the renter." Elder said he was disappointed she didn't have more to say.

"She's a businesswoman," he said. "She has things to take care of. The woman wants to make money, I totally understand that. But I also understand giving business a shot."

The store isn't closing for good, though they will be moving elsewhere in Aggieville, Elder said. Legally, he's unable to put his name on the new store, he said, since Williams still owns the operation.

"It'll be called 'The Gamer,' since that's what everybody calls it anyway," he said.

Elder, who spent time in Kansas City as loan officer for Plaza Mortgage Co., said he has enough business sense to keep it going, as well as being an avid gamer and comic collector, he said "I've looked at all the numbers, and there's no reason it can't work," he said.

Stop summertime boredom

SANDY DAVIS

With summer reaching the halfway mark, ideas for summer recreation could be drying up.

Summer fun doesn't have to consist of sprawling in front of the television watching soap operas and reruns of 1980s sitcoms. Sports, arts and crafts and historical museums are some options for bored students with free time on their hands.

Clint Hutchens, assistant manager at Play It Again Sports, said in-line skates, baseball, softball and golf are popular summer sports.

"Since Tiger Woods won the Master's, there's been a huge surge in golf sales - youth and adults," Hutchens said.

Hutchens said in-line skating continues to be a popular activity, especially in-line hockey. At the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex, sand volleyball and basketball are popular, as well as handball and racquetball. Tuttle Creek State Park and Reservoir offers areas for swimming, boating, fishing and hunt-► Thinking about RAD-A-TAT tattoo discourages getting tattoos with a boyfriend or girlfriend's name. Removing a $25 tattoo can cost between $500 and $1,500.

RENE EICHEM

For some people, displaying purple pride means donning Wildcat gear on game days or singing the school fight song. For people who want to permanently display the joy of being part of the K-State family, a Powercat tattoo is anoth-

Marilyn Martinez, body piercer at RAD-A-TAT in Aggieville, said the most popular tattoos are the Powercat, the Tasmanian Devil and roses.

"The Powercat is most popular when school first starts in the fall," she said. "We've done about 500 in the two years we've been open.'

Martinez said a 2-inch Powercat takes about 30 minutes to complete and costs $40.

Men and women have different preferences when getting tattooed, Martinez said.

"Men usually go for the Powercat, and women want roses or something similar," she said. "Men usually get their tattoos on their arm or shoulder, and women usually get them on their ankle or bikini line."

Although tattoos have grown in popularity recently, tattooing can be traced back thousands of years. According to "The History of Tattooing and Its Significance," there is archeological proof that people got tattoos in Egypt between 4000 and 2000 B.C.

Early tattooing was done using bones or wood to pierce the skin. In later years, it was done with a set of needles attached to a wooden handle, and the skin was punctured only two or three times per second. In the late 1800s, the first electric tattooing machine was invented, which sped up

Today's equipment holds seven needles, and each needle can pierce the skin 100 times per second.

Martinez said they try to discourage people from choosing names of boyfriends and girlfriends as a tattoo because they sometimes regret it later.

'We had a lady who came in one day and got her boyfriend's name tattooed on her, and she came back the next day and wanted us to cover it up. Apparently, they broke up overnight or something," she said.

If someone wants a tattoo they must be at least 18 years old. RAD-A-TAT won't do a tattoo for people under 18, even if they have their parent's consent.

'We could be sued and fined $5,000 if we gave a minor a tattoo," Martinez said. "We also won't give anyone a tattoo if they are drunk. In fact, we prefer it if that person hasn't had any alcohol to drink in at least 48 hours because they could bleed more."

Martinez said the majority of people coming for tattoos are military personnel and college students, although some older customers come in too

"We have one man who is probably in his 60s who has been in several times for tattoos," she said. "A lot of middleaged women come in and have their belly buttons pierced,

Martinez has pierced belly buttons, eyebrows, tongues, noses, lips, ears, nipples and genital areas. The lower the piercing is on the body, the more it costs.

If people get piercings and later change their minds, they can take the jewelry out and let the hole grow closed. That's not the case for a tattoo.

"Tattoos are permanent," Martinez said. "A lot of people think they don't want a body piercing because they think it will hurt longer and be with them forever. That's not true. A piercing will grow closed, but a tattoo is usually with you for

According to a plastic surgeon's office in Topeka, a $25 tattoo can cost between $500 and $1,500 to remove. There will also be some scarring.

Tattoos can be removed by laser surgery, which is the most expensive method, and sanding it off. It can also be cut off, which is the cheapest method.

Call Hall offers competitive prices on meat, dairy products

SERAPHINE NAEYMI

Call Hall may be K-State's best kept secret.

The building is home to the K-State Dairy Processing Plant and Dairy Bar.

The Dairy Bar offers a wide range of products including 37 flavors of ice cream, milk, various cheeses, eggs and select meats available for sale.

Srinivas Adapa, dairy plant manager, and John Wolf, manager of the meat lab at Weber Hall, said there are advantages of making products at the University.

"Our dairy products are comparably cheaper to store-bought dairy products," Adapa said.

Although the meat is not priced less than store-bought meat, Wolf said the meat produced at K-State is high quality and always fresh.

One mile north of campus is the Kansas State's dairy farm.

The farm has 200 cows that are cared for by state employees and K-State students.

The meat lab and dairy lab are required to follow the Food and Drug regulations. Adminstration's Machines, worker's performance and final products are all examined closely to ensure high-quality products, Adapa said.

The products are fresh and available for immediate sale.

"We process fluid milk twice a week, and it is sometimes available the same day it came from the cow. The customer can always receive the product within two to three days from which it was actually brought from the farm," Adapa said. The meat is also available within the week. "The meat that comes from our lab does not sit in a freezer for long periods of time." Wolf said.

Adapa said there are only 10 to 12 universities with facilities similar to K-State's.

"K-State students are fortunate to have facilities like these available to them. Very few schools have facilities like ours," Adapa said. The facilities give K-State animal science students hands-on experience. Adapa said it is beneficial to the learning process if students actually participate. Because the products are always made at K-State, consumers know where they are made, If the rare complaint does occur, the consumer can go directly to the producer. K-State's Knowledge will find the problem and

In grocery chains, products are from various producers and hard to locate if a problem does arise.

The meat lab and dairy plant are consistently working on new products. Apple Dapple, Coconut Fudge, Wild Thing and Mint Fudge Swirl are new ice cream flavors from the dairy plant. Cajun Sausage will be available from the meat lab next semester.

Body could be Mexican drug lord

GUAMUCHILITO, Mexico the childhood home of Mexico's top drug lord, dirty blankets covered an open crypt Sunday. Four candles burned in the chapel, adorned with icons of Jesus, the Virgin of Guadalupe and Jesus Malverde claimed by drug dealers as their patron saint.

Hundreds of chairs were stacked against the walls of the house, shut off from the world by a 10-foot cement fence topped with barbed wire. Five-foot wreaths of roses lined the pathway.

But there was no funeral. There was no body to bury.

Mexican authorities flew it back to Mexico City early Sunday aboard after determining that the body - a 40ish man with scars from recent plastic surgery on his face and liposuction on his stomach — could be that of drug lord Amado Carrillo Fuentes.

The federal attorney general's office said Carrillo had died early Friday morning, apparently of a heart attack, following extensive plastic surgery at a Mexico City hospital.

In Washington, U.S. Enforcement Administration chief Thomas Constantine confirmed Sunday that the body was that of Carrillo.

"(Carrillo) may have escaped earthly justice, but I'm sure that there's a special place in hell reserved for those like him who have destroyed countless human lives and devastated families on both sides of the border," Constantine said in a statement

Earlier Sunday, Constantine called the surgery "a desperate attempt to escape pursuing law enforcement."

Carrillo was dubbed "Lord of the Skies" for his use of jetliners to fly in multi-ton cocaine shipments from Colombia. His death threatened to set off turf wars for control of cocainesmuggling along Mexico's 2,000-mile border with the United States.

Back at "Finca Aurora," the compound named after Carrillo's mother, only his grandchildren and nephews were left to receive well-wishers - and wait.

Carrillo's mother, who went to a funeral home in nearby Culiacan on Saturday night to identify the body, flew to Mexico City on Sunday to get it back, outraged that investigators were holding her son.

"The authorities won't turn over the body," said Arturo Valdez, 29, a friend of the family.

With Carrillo dead, Constantine predicted the drug organization would have problems replacing him.

"The disruption his death will cause among Mexican drug trafficking organizations will be significant," Constantine said. "Law enforcement on both sides of the border should capitalize on the ensuing confusion, and we should redouble our efforts to destroy his organization."

But Phil Jordan, a retired U.S. drug agent who recently led a U.S. government agency that monitors Mexico's drug lords, said the death would probably do nothing to disrupt the flow of cocaine into the United States.

He noted that flow didn't stop when Mexican authorities arrested another top trafficker, Juan Garcia Abrego, 18 months ago. Carrillo reportedly inherited much of Garcia Abrego's business. Jordan said Carrillo's younger brother Vicente could be expected to assume leadership of the operation.

Carrillo led a drug operation based in Juarez, across the border from El Paso, Texas. Since January, that organization had been responsible for distributing tons of cocaine into New York City, Constantine said.

"He was displacing Colombian organizations in New York City, and we had never seen that before," the DEA chief said. Born in Sinaloa state, a hotbed of drug trafficking, Carrillo eventually set up his operations in Juarez. His importance steadily rose as mentors and then rivals fell to police.

Carrillo and his gang have been under intense law enforcement pressure since February, when Gen. Jesus Gutierrez Rebollo, head of Mexico's anti-drug agency was arrested.

Mexican prosecutors said Gutierrez accepted bribes from Carrillo, a charge Gutierrez has denied.

events in 1953, including the Masters, the U.S. Open and the British Open. Woods' other five career victories were the Masters, Byron Nelson Classic and Mercedes Championships this year and the Las Vegas Invitational and Disney Classic in 1996.

Woods had been struggling, failing to break par in 11 of 12 rounds and finishing 67th, 19th and 43rd in his previous three events. He took a week off and said the rest rejuvenated him.

He entered Sunday tied for the lead with Loren Roberts and Leonard.

Roberts, who was paired with Woods, stayed close until No. 9. But while Roberts bogeved that hole. Woods parlayed a 329-yard drive into a birdie for a three-stroke lead over Roberts.

As Woods bogeyed No. 10, Leonard and Lowery each birdied 11 to pull into a tie. Woods then birdied three of the next four holes while Leonard and Lowery got bogeys on 13 and never threatened thereafter.

"Twelve was pretty big," Woods said. "After I missed the opportunity on 11 and I made bogey at 10, I needed something to start the back nine on a positive

Nobilo, playing two groups in front of Woods, birdied 15 to tie at 11-under. Unbeknownst to Nobilo, however, Woods had nailed his near hole-in-one on 14; within moments, Nobilo trailed for good.

Woods then birdied the par-5 15th to go up by two, and the huge gallery surrounding the tour's most popular player grew louder and louder by the hole.

Woods finished with pars on 16, 17 and 18. After his final putt on 18, he threw the ball into the gallery and then hugged caddy Fluff Cowan.

Lawyers battle to collect on Citadel legal fees

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHARLESTON, S.C. - Lawyers who fought to admit women to The Citadel now will fight over millions of dollars in legal fees run up during the five-year battle

The lawyers who challenged the state military school's all-male admissions policy want $6.7 million. But the school, says the attorneys, most of whom came from out-of-state, are billing for "grossly duplicative and excessive hours" at rates of up to $450 an hour.

U.S. District Judge C. Weston Houck opens a hearing Monday.

The Citadel dropped its all-male policy a year ago after the U.S. Supreme Court ruled a similar policy at Virginia Military Institute was unconstitutional.

Four women enrolled this year, though two later dropped out, saying they had been hazed and harassed. State and federal officials still are investigating.

The women's lawyers first represented a group of women veterans and later Shannon Faulkner, who quit the school after a week in August 1995, and Nancy

The Manhattan Center for the Arts is offering two pottery classes that students can participate in, even if they've never had experience in ceramics.

Karen Lauseng, program director at the Center, said beginning/intermediate and intermediate/advanced wheel throwing classes will be offered in July.

UFM also offers classes in everything from swimming, arts and crafts, dance and gardening to cake decorating, financial issues and meditation. Another way to gain knowledge and have fun is to visit the Riley County Historical Museum. Jeanne Mithen, librarian at the museum, said the museum and surrounding buildings, as well as Goodnow House and the log cabin in City Park are all open to visitors.

The budget also projects there will be no city and county sales-tax growth in 1998. Greer said this is a concern because sales tax is the largest source of revenue for the city, accounting for $9,947,318 of the proposed 1998 budget. That is down $119,565 from last year's budget.

Director of Finance Curt Wood said the slow growth rate may be a result of recent downsizing

Also included in the budget is a list of major projects for next year.

More than $342,000 will be transferred to the City/University Projects Fund to finance assessment of north College Avenue, a traffic signal at the intersection of Denison Avenue and Kimball Drive, campus lighting, bike-path improvements and the botanical-gardens project.

Expansion of the Manhattan Public Library should also begin early in the year, and it will be paid for with money from the 1998 Bond and

Other projects include expanding and renovating City Hall, starting a five-year program to repair decaying streets and reconstructing Anderson Avenue

Greer said rebuilding Anderson Avenue from west of 14th Street to Harris Avenue is a top priority, and he said the city hopes to have the design, bidding and property acquisitions completed in 1998. Construction is slated to begin in 1999.

The public will have a chance to comment on the budget during the July 15 commission meeting, and the city will certify the budget to Riley County on Aug. 25.

Riley County police install digital finger print system

LANCE ZEISCH

The Riley County Police Department is changing with the times.

Starting next year, it will begin taking digital fingerprints and mug shots instead of the traditional inked cards and instant photographs.

Jerome Wendt, computer assistance administrator, said the new fingerprinting system will cost approximately $60,000, with $45,000 of the funds coming from federal grants. The new mug-shot system will cost about $41,000, with $30,000 coming from federal grants. The remaining $26,000 for the systems will be paid by Riley County and the City of Manhattan.

The updates are part of an on-going sevenyear program in which the RCPD will change its computer system, linking it to the state through the Kansas Bureau of Investigation and with other local criminal justice agencies. Capt. Dana Kyle, commander of administrative services, said the current identification system is outdated and updates will allow computer-imaged mug shots.

"Currently, we are using the '60s technology of taking Polaroid pictures of individuals for identification purposes," he said. "Those photos can be relayed to other agencies by fax machines, where they degrade considerably in the quali-

Kyle said when the new mug-shot system is in place, it will be able to digitally send photos it has taken here over the wire. KBI will then be able to compare the RCPD photograph with a number of others they have in their files.

"This will allow us to provide mug-shot lineups with similar features more readily than what we currently can do because we are having to search our files and find five or six photos of similar nature to the individual we suspect of a crime. Once this in place, the computer will do it for us," he said.

During the transition phase, RCPD will be able to take its hard copy files and put them onto digital compact discs for archival purposes, he

Besides digital mug shots, the department will also switch to digital fingerprints. Instead of the traditional ink-fingerprinting system, individuals will place their fingers on a glass scan-

Capt. Brad Schoen, commander of technical services, said the speed of verification for fingerprints sent to KBI will be greatly increased with the new system because the prints will not need to be manually coded by KBI. In the past, a duplicate hard copy of every print taken was sent to KBI. Now all fingerprints will be sent digitally, he said.

Schoen said he can envision a day when police officers will be able to carry thumb scanners in their cars to identify people by their

"If you're a student in Aggieville and the officers think you're under age drinking in a bar and you say 'I don't have an ID,' they'll tell you to stick your thumb here. Now if you've got a record and have been fingerprinted in the past, they'll know instantly who you are. It's just another means to verify identification," he said.

Woman kills inmate from outside Arizona prison; guards then kill her FLORENCE, Ariz. - A woman drove up to a prison fence Wednesday and opened fire with a rifle, killing a death-row inmate believed to be her husband as he worked in the vegetable garden. Guards then shot her to death.

The motive in the slaying Wednesday of Floyd Bennett Thornton Jr., 36, was not immediately known. The woman's name was not immediately released.

Before he was killed, Thornton approached the fence, and prison guards shot him with bean bags to knock him down. Thornton got back up, and the woman shot him.

The woman then switched to a handgun and walked toward the fence. Prison guards shot and killed her.

Thornton was sentenced to die for the 1993 slaying of 74-year-old Dale Duke, who was shot in front of his wife as they returned to their home. Thornton had escaped from jail while awaiting trial for a 1991 slaying.

Judge throws out attempted murder charge in AIDS rape case

HIGH POINT, N.C. - A judge Wednesday threw out an attempted murder charge against a man accused of raping a 12-year-old girl while knowing that he had the AIDS virus.

Andrew Lee Monk, 37, was the first man in North Carolina to be brought to trial on charges of attempted first-degree murder for allegedly using the AIDS virus as a weapon.

Monk is still charged with statutory rape and taking indecent liberties with a minor. Prosecutors said Monk knew he was HIV positive when the rape occurred.

McVeigh's attornies file motion for new trial

DENVER - Timothy McVeigh's lawyers asked for a new trial Monday, saying the jury that condemned him to die for the Oklahoma City bombing was unfairly swayed by pretrial publicity and émotional testimony from victims.

The attorneys also cited 13 other arguments in their 180-page motion, including U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch's decisions to exclude the defense theory that an international conspiracy was behind the blast.

Last month, McVeigh was convicted of murder and conspiracy and sentenced to death by injection for the April 19, 1995, truck bombing that tore apart the Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building and killed 168 people.

Codefendant Terry Nichols is scheduled to stand trial Sept. 29 on identical charges.

Clinton lawyer asks for affidavit describing characteristics

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. - President Clinton's attorney has asked Paula Jones for a copy of an affidavit she signed which describes the distinguishing physical characteristics she says she noticed when she was allegedly propositioned by the then-governor of Arkansas.

The request was included in a set of interrogatories and a request for documents sent to Jones' attorneys last Thursday.

In a case filed in 1994, Jones alleges she was summoned to Clinton's room at the Excelsior Hotel in Little Rock three years earlier. She claimed that Clinton exposed himself and asked her to perform a sexual act.

After she spurned his advances, she said, she was moved into a dead-end job with no chance for promotion.

Jones was an employee of the Arkansas Industrial Development Commission at the time of the alleged incident. Clinton filed his formal response to the case last week, denying all of Jones' allegations. Jones' legal team will have 30 days to respond once the case is formally returned to federal court in Little Rock.

WOMAN PICKETS K-STATE TO SEEK TRUTH

A woman picketed in the freespeech zone in front of the K-State Student Union last week because of the alleged battery of her son, a participant in the Upward Bound Program at K-State.

Members of the Upward Bound summer school program are 14 to 18 year-olds from Wamego, Rack Creek, Riley County, Manhattan and Junction City high schools.

Chon Un said she is upset at program directors because her 15-year-old son, James, was allegedly hit by three other boys involved in the program. She also said her son was not given medical attention.

Un said she wasn't notified of the incident until she called her son. She said her son said he had been hit by three different boys for refusing to join a club.

Reginland McGowan, director of Upward Bound for 10 years, said the suspacts are 14 or 15-years-old and admits voung men in the program are very physical scause of their age and the way they

However, after being reprimanded, the behavior of the suspects and other members of the program has improved, McGowan

When Un contacted those in charge of the Upward Bound program, she said two different people yelled at her son and accused him of lying.

Un said the people she contacted said physical initiation is not unusual.

"They said everybody did it that way, but I think hitting is hitting," she said. Un said she was most upset because she

Korean journalists visit K-State

A journalism professor and eight newspaper publishers from Korea visited K-State's Huck Boyd National Center for Community Media this week to learn about the news business in the United

The visiting publishers learned about community journalism and how to run a profitable newspaper.

Hosoon Chang, a professor of mass communications at Soonchunhyang University in Korea said the publishers wanted to apply lessons they learned from more than 200 years of American experience to their struggling young newspapers in Korea.

Chang studied mass communications at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He took historical lessons of U.S. press home to Korea where he has tried to use them to help Korea's new community newspapers survive.

"American journalism is rooted in community journalism," Chang said. "Newspapers grow with the communi-

In Korea, there are communities, but no community newspapers, Chang said. Until 1989, the Korean constitution prohibited local elections and community newspapers. Newspapers were published, but were owned by the government or powerful businesses. Chang said the newspapers were also influenced by these interests.

"They were legally independent, but not quite independent at all," he said. New newspapers face many problems on the road to success. Chang said one of the largest issues is finance. The newspapers are privately owned or have sold shares of stock to get started. However, the advertising income which maintains the newspapers is scarce. "Still many business people think advertising is secondary or unnecessary in business practice," Chang said.

Part of the group's tour included visits to the Marysville Advocate and Manhattan Mercury, where the group learned about business practices, Linda Gilmore, assistant director of the Huck Boyd Center and the group's host, said.

The local economies are also in bad shape in Korea. Many people are leaving small communities for the big cities where there are jobs. Chang said the government is also creating problems for Censorship is not used, but suppres sion is common, Chang said. Several newspapers were shut down for weeks at a time for printing stories about local elections.

Korean newspapers also have a different focus than their counterparts in the United States. They report mostly local news. One reason is because broadcast agencies are still owned by the government, Chang said. The major daily newspapers in Korea also have close ties with government parties. This does not provide much national news to community papers, and no investigative reporting on the government is allowed, Chang said. "Korean newspapers are not watchdogs like in America," Chang said.

Chang said he and the other publishers are still optimistic about the future of free press in Korea. He added that the Korean government still has too much control right now, though.

"Journalism is very important to establishing a democratic system in our country," Chang said. "I think the government will open up some, but I'm not sure we will have something like American journalism. We have a different culture.

Pathfinder's success driven by global cooperation, not competition

Pathfinder mission to Mars has evoked memories and the inevitable comparisons to past NASA missions. Many have likened it to the historic Apollo 11 lunar landing on July 20, 1969. Despite the comparable level of success each mission had, there are still distinct differences between them

First, the geopolitical climate has shifted he recent success of the dramatically in the 28 years since Neil Armstrong took humankind's first step upon another stellar body. The Apollo landing was the culmination of a frantic race to the moon. It was a competition between two nations, the United States and the Soviet Union, that cost millions of dollars and several lives in a match to plant both a flag and the seeds of nationalism that could turn the tide of the Cold War.

The Pathfinder mission is the result of an atmosphere of cooperation, one in which Americans ride the Russian Mir space station, where Russians fly aboard the space shuttle and the Cold War is a historical foot-

Also, the Apollo success was an unparalleled human accomplishment, a moment of protecting a crew from the rigors of space travel to land on the moon and return safely.

Pathfinder, for all of its technical wizardry, is still just a machine and will not be returning to Earth in the near future. NASA did not need to manage food or oxygen for Pathfinder's months of transit to Mars and could afford to have the probe slam into the planet at speeds that would reduce Buzz Aldrin to applesauce.

Pathfinder's scientific accomplishment is profound, but it's no Apollo 11.

The confession I have to make is this: I am a Jesus Freak.

Not a religious person, nor a churchoer, but a Jesus Freak. I am crazy about esus, and I will not hide it anymore.

Encyclopedic Webster's New Dictionary defines the word "freak" as one that is very abnormal or unusual." I esolve to be "one who is very abnormal or musual" for Jesus.

For far too many Christians - myself ncluded - their affair with Jesus is a very ersonal, private matter. Sure, we claim to e in love with Jesus, but when it comes ight down to it - at our jobs, in our chools, with our friends - we keep quiet. When people around us wear their person-I beliefs on their shoulders, we put ours in our pockets.

It seems that every opinion but the esus Freaks' opinion is tolerated and even velcomed. I recall instances where I was ctually frightened to give my opinions vhen in discussions with various groups of people. This was not a fear for my life ir health, but rather a fear of the reactions thers may have to my beliefs.

I was ashamed of Jesus. I will be shamed of him no more.

I know that there are many of us that vould call ourselves Christians. But does t change our lives?

We wander through our lives looking o different and acting no different than ny other group of people in the world. 'hey treat others as they are treated - we reat others as we are treated. We should not expect the world to love us when we fall in love with Jesus. In fact, in John 15:18-19, Jesus tells us that if we love him, the world and the people in it will literally "hate" us, for we will have nothing in common with them. I want to fall in love with him like that. I want to fall in love with him so much that it does not matter what others say or think about me. It hurts me very much to think of all the time I have wasted by not being a Jesus Freak. I want to be so "abnormal" in my love for him that no one can mistake

I want — I long — to be a Jesus Freak.

Post-prophylactic pregnancy ponderances

FEAR OF SURPRISE CONCEPTION ADDS TO WOMANLY WOES

There are few things in life more magical than the birth of a child. For most of us in who are in college, eating Ramen noodles and living on financial aid, at this point in our lives there are few things more frightening than the thought of the birth of a child.

I am not sure if men understand exactly how gripping the fear of pregnancy is for most of us. Every single month for the majority of our lives we, the women of the world, worry about being pregnant. Some months the anxiety is worse than others. I'll give the men a few examples.

MARY RENEE SMITH is a sopho more in speech. You can contact Mary by e-mail at (mojo@ksu.edu).

You know those little pamphlets you get with medicathe informational sheets with the really tiny print and all those numbers about tests on lab rats printed on what seems to be thick toilet paper?

Every woman I know has the pamphlet for her chosen form of birth control. Occasionally, during moments of trepidation, she will refer to that sheet and recheck the effectiveness of her method to reassure herself she can not be pregnant. Or at least her odds of winning the lottery are only slightly worse than the odds she is pregnant.

failure rates of their birth control methods. I've seen these conversations turn into contraceptive competitions, with the women who has the lowest failure rate or who has tried the most methods being the winner. Most women have at some point in their life have suffered from "The Virgin Mary Syndrome," as I call it. This is the overwhelming concern, although she has not had sex in the recent past or ever, perhaps somehow she is pregnant. This fear usually occurs when the monthly visitor is a more than few days

"The Virgin Mary Syndrome" is typically followed by the genuine concern that rumors of women getting pregnant from toilet seats may have some basis in fact, and aren't just bus station legend.

the thought of unwanted pregnancy. I have seen guys go with their girlfriends to Lafene Health Center. It doesn't take a rocket scientist to determine why they are there. You can tell by the fear in the faces of both people The difference between men and women

> The only cure for this affliction of suspicion is the disease itself. One of the best parts of being pregnant is not having to worry about getting pregnant. Sex is better during pregnancy because you aren't using birth control and aren't terrified about getting pregnant.

As if the self-inflicted apprehension of conception is not enough, there are a million home pregnancy test commercials on

I love the way those ads are written. The woman in the ad is standing around her house in a long silk robe waiting for the test to turn pink or blue or show a plus or minus or yes or no or whatever. A few seconds later, she just smiles and goes about her merry way. We never get to see the results.

These commercials never show her trying to pee in that little bitty cup or screaming at her boyfriend about the condoms he should have bought, which could have avoided all this. The ads never show her crying on the bathroom floor or jumping up and down or calling her best friend after finally figuring out the hieroglyphics and deciphering the results

I don't understand the idea of a home pregnancy test anyway. It seems like a waste of about $15 and a trip to Kmart. If the home test is positive, you go to the doctor and get tested again. If the home test is negative, you go to the doctor and get tested again.

A pregnancy is never an accident. It isn't like you are driving down the street and suddenly get hit by a pregnancy. A pregnancy can be a surprise.

There's a old saying explaining the difference between an accident and a surprise. An accident is something unexpected and unpleasant. A surprise is when you are lucky enough to have something wonderful happen you didn't plan on.

Royals fire Boone, hire Muser as manager

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Bob Boone, his team 10 games under .500 and his boss out of patience, was fired as manager of the Kansas City Royals Wednesday and replaced by Chicago Cubs hitting coach Tony Muser.

"It's been my dream for about 30 years to have an opportunity to take a team and make it better," said Muser, who turns 50 on Aug. 1. "I'd had eight interviews. But it was like I'd had eight at-bats and the rest of my baseball career in Kansas City."

The Royals, who closed the first half of the season on an eight-game losing skid, also fired hitting instructor Greg Luzinski and first base coach Mitchell Page.

Frank White, the Royals' eight-time Gold Glove second baseman, will take over for Page while Tom Poquette, another former Royal who was the organization's roving hitting instructor last season, replaces Luzinski.

Last year, after the Royals finished last in the AL Central for the first time in their history, general manager Herk Robinson gave Boone a ringing endorsement and a two-year contract extention.

But this season, despite the addition of productive players such as Jay Bell, Jeff King and Chili Davis, a near-total collapse by the bulllpen left the Royals 36-46 at the All-Star Break, 9 1/2 games behind Cleveland in the AL Central.

"I extended Bob Boone's contract because I thought he was the right man for the job," Robinson said.

"I thought our club last year played hard and performed admirably. But that was before we had taken on Chili Davis, Jay Bell and Jeff King. Had somebody told me we'd be 10 games under .500 with the addition of those three players, I don't know if I'd done that."

Boone, 49, part of a three-generation baseball family, had a 2 1/2-year record as Royals manager of 181-206. The former All-Star catcher replaced McRae in 1995 and quickly became known as an autocratic, hands-on field boss prone to experimenting with different lineups.

"I think it's a club that's capable of playing better than .500 baseball, better than we've played in the last two weeks," Robinson said. The way we played in the last two weeks was unacceptable."

Messages to Boone's home Wednesday were not returned.

Robinson said Boone took the news "like a professional" when he fired him Tuesday night.

"He handled it as I hoped he would," Robinson said. "He said he realized the club had not performed as he had hoped. I think his words were, 'I think you did the right thing. I probably would have done the same thing.

"The day will come when this club regrets that it fired Bob Boone," Page said.

Muser is the fourth manager the Royals have hired since 1987 with no previous major league managerial experience. "Am I aware of that?" Muser said. "That's called baseball. I'm not afraid of that. It comes with the territory. But don't misunderstand me. I don't want to be here just two or three years."

since Hank Aaron's blast in the 1972 game

Then there are those certain games each year that promise to be exciting. The All-Star Game is one of those games.

Just think about it. You have the best of the best facing each other. Sure, each side wants to win, but they are out there having fun doing what those players do so great - playing baseball. Watch the highlight tapes, and you can see for yourself what a great game it was.

Edgar Martinez led off the second inning for the American League in a scoreless game. He faced Greg Maddux, one of the best pitchers in the game, and took him deep to give the AL a 1-0 lead.

In the third inning, second baseman Roberto Alomar made a diving stop of a Craig-Biggio grounder. Then, from his knees, he turned to second, realized he couldn't get the double play and turned on his knees and threw Biggio out at first. Then in the fourth, when pitcher David Cone had runners on first and third, it looked like trouble when he threw a pitch in the dirt that got away from catcher Ivan Rodriguez. But Rodriguez reacted quickly and caught Mike Piazza, the runner on first, in a rundown - another great play.

Later, Cal Ripken Jr., playing deep at third base, charged a bouncing grounder, barehanded the ball off the hop and made a perfect side-arm throw over to first base to throw out Jeff Blauser for the final out in the top of the fifth. This was Ripken's first All-Star Game start at third base after more than a dozen years as the leading votegetter for shortstons

Jose Rosado of the Royals seemed to be in trouble when Javier Lopez homered off him. He was only the 11th player in history to hit a homer in his first All-Star at bat, but the homer only tied the score and Rosado went on to pick up the victory. And then there was Sandy Alomar Jr., playing in front of his hometown fans in a game that he had dedicated to the memory of his grandmother who died last week.

Just before he hit that shot, the television commentators were looking at a graphic showing that Alomar, who put together a 30-game hitting streak going into the break, was hot on pitches thrown anywhere. He puts the ball over the fence to give the AL the lead and earn himself the game's MVP award.

Before the game, both Sandy and his brother Roberto - of spitting fame - pinned black ribbons to their jerseys in memory of their grandmother. Later, Sandy Alomar said he had dedicated the game and the rest of the season to her.

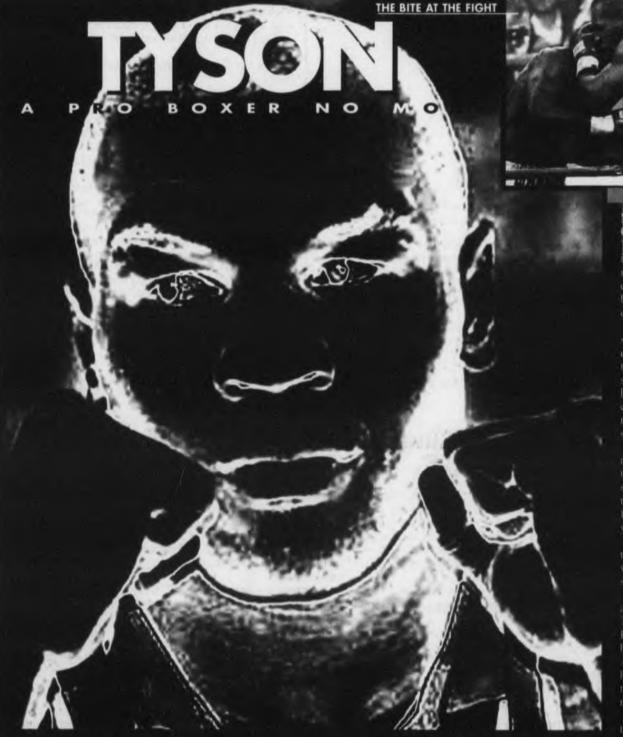

And if you watched this game on television, you got a special treat - the catcher cam. This was a camera attached to the catcher's mask to give the fans a look at just what the catcher is seeing as that 95-mph fastball is coming at him. I doubt that this would ever be used on a regular basis, but it helps make the ballgame exciting. Just like interleague play, it is something new for the fans to enjoy.

Nobody can tell me that this was not an exciting game. Look at the stadium - it was packed. Yet another sign that baseball continues to recover from the disasters of the strike a few years back, and the fans have come back to the ball park.

The true fans will continue to see baseball as the national pastime.

And remember the statement made in the Nike commercial during the game, "If baseball can survive those old Astros uniforms, it can survive anything."

Broxterman recieves postgraduate scholarship from NCAA

JEFF PALMER

One of K-State's most successful track athletes, high jumper Ed Broxterman, has added another award to his long list of accomplishments.

Broxterman, who competed in the 1996 Summer Olympics, received a $5,000 NCAA Postgraduate Scholarship, awarded to only 107 athletes outside of basketball and football.

The scholarship can be used for study at the university or professional school of Broxterman's choice, and he plans to continue his studies and training here at K-State. "Ed epitomizes the term student-athlete,"

K-State track coach Cliff Royelto said. "There is no doubt Ed is very deserving of this award."

Broxterman, graduated from K-State in 1997 with a 3.53 GPA, is going to work toward a master's degree in business administration while training and competing.

"I'm going to compete in some meets in the U.S. and hopefully some in Europe as well. If I don't compete well, I will always have my academics to fall back on," said Broxterman.

Broxterman

Broxterman received the award by sending in an application to the NCAA, which included sections filled out by Broxterman, Rovelto, K-State athletics director Max Urick and his Barbara Allen and Cynthia advisers -McCahon.

"I would like to thank Coach Rovelto, Max Urick, Barb Allen, Dr. McCahon, Beth Powers and all the professors I've had at K-State for helping me to win this award." Broxterman said.

Broxterman will be training with the ultimate goal of going to the 2000 Olympics in Sydney, Australia. When he competed in the 1996 games he was 22 years old, which he said is very young for a high jumper.

"The peak age for a high jumper is 28, and I will be 26 in 2000, so I should be at about the right age," he said

Rovelto said he can't wait to see what Broxterman will do in the future. He said Broxterman has always taken his athletics and his education very seriously, and no matter what he chooses to do, he will be successful.

"We judge success on performing potential, and Ed has always performed to his potential. Last year he had mononucleosis, appendicitis and stress fractures, and he still did all that he could do for our track team," said Royelto. "Ed Broxterman is going to be a wonderful ambassador for K-State in the future."

LINSEY LUTHER directs volleyball drills during a summer volleyball camp at Ahearn Field House.

THE VOLLEYBALL

The first of K-State's four summer volleyball camps began this week at Ahearn Field

The camp, run by the new K-State volleyball coaching staff, is open to all women in the 7th-12th grades.

Suzie Wiemers, assistant K-State volleyball coach, said they expect about 165 women for the four camps

There are two setter/hitter camps, one elite camp, and one overall skills camp for the women to choose from. Only the elite camp has requirements for attendance - the players must have a letter from their high-school coach stating their ability as a junior-varsity or varsity player, or they must have previously attended a Wildcat camp.

"I decided to come to this camp because I heard from people who had been here before that it was a very good place to come. Besides, they beat KU," Kelly Leffert, a 14-year-old from Overland Park, said. The campers begin the day at 9 a.m. with basic training and skills, taught to them by K-

State coaches, players and affiliates. "We are all technical and training coaches, so we teach them technical and training skills," Wiemers said.

After a lunch break, the players return to the gym at 1:30 p.m. for more training and coaching until dinner is served. The women return for the night session when the competition begins. At night, the women are put on teams according to age and ability, and compete in league games

"I really like this camp because the coaches keep us working hard on all basic skills you need to know for volleyball. They teach skills that will come in handy during the school season," said Lori Pollman, a 15-year-old from Manhattan.

During the day, the camp is divided into different sections based on skills the coaches teach to the players.

Each coach takes a different skill - hitting, receiving or serving - and teaches it to the women for a set period of time. After the time is up, the women move to a different skill, ensuring all campers are taught each skill

K-State summer volleyball camps throughout the day.

165 7th-12th graders to attend

"One of the main reasons I chose this camp was to get better at basic skills I need to improve for next school year, and I heard they teach them well at this camp," Pollman said.

Each camp lasts four days, and the women have the option of being a resident and living in the K-State residence halls, or being a day camper and coming to the camp at day and going home at night. The resident fee for the camp is $220, and the fee for day-campers is $150. The fee includes three meals a day and housing. The second setter/hitter camp is only a day camp, and it costs $90 and includes lunch for the women.

ELVES K-State playwright's dark comedy debuts on stage in Kansas City

-State student and playwright Kevin Rabas has written and directed a dark comedy that will debut on stage in Kansas City later this month.

Rabas, graduate student in creative writing, is originally from the Kansas City area. When he heard the theater in the basement of the Westport Coffee House was available for playwrights to rent, he contacted the owners, who accepted his play for

The play, "Elves," is about the character and the relationships with his wife and mother.

Curtis and his wife encounter problems in their relationship when the mother makes calls to them regarding stolen elf ornaments.

The role of Joy is played by Bryn Gribben, graduate student in cultural studies, and the role of Curtis is played by Dan Peterson, graduate student in theater.

Rabas wrote the one-act play for a playwriting class last semester, and it was performed for the Playwright's Stage dramatic readings forum in the Purple Masque Theatre.

"The Playwright's Stage is a student group that is set up so playwrights here at KSU can have their work viewed and read," Rabas said.

"The reading went so well that I decided to make a production of it."

The Westport Coffee House Theatre has been open for two years, and Rabas said the it has approximately 14 original productions going on this summer.

There are 150 seats in the theater," he said, "and if the play is sold out, you make your money back."

Rabas is splitting the cost of the $150-per-night theater rental with another playwright, Scott Cox, who will be showing his two-act play, "Slit Skirts," immediately follow-

"Both plays are about couples in the '90s," Rabas said. "They should play well together."

K-Rock afternoon show changes hands

JOHN HENDERSON

Steve Anthony was fired from his job as a disc jockey at KMKF-FM 101.5

Anthony played host to an afternoon program called "Slice of the Homegrown," which was geared towards local music.

Manhattan band members owe a lot to the effort Anthony made to book their shows, Jake Goheen, bassist for Red Eldon, "He'll definitely be hard to replace, if not impossible," Goheen said.

Raubin Pierce, program director for K-Rock, said the decision to let Anthony go had less to do with him and more to do with the station.

Pierce said during the last two years the station has experienced a general dip in its ratings. Pierce worked with a consultant to refocus the station in order to improve its Shane Sellers presented such an opportunity, Pierce said. Sellers had been a DJ at K-Rock from 1991 to 1992 and had later worked at stations in Wichita and Billings. Montana.

"He was the most popular personality we've ever had," Pierce said.

Sellers has children living in Lawrence, and he wanted to return to work in Manhattan, he said.

"We looked at each day-part," Pierce said, "and we realized the best spot for him was the afternoon drive, from two until seven."

That was Anthony's shift, and Pierce said there wasn't another time slot for Anthony to fill.

"The decision to fire Steve was probably the toughest decision I've made so far," he said.

Anthony had been a DJ at the station for 9-1/2 years, even before it was known as K-Rock, Pierce said. "Slice of the Homegrown," which Pierce said had been in the works for some time before its appearance on the K-Rock schedules about two years ago, will be moved to 7:30 p.m., and Michael Storm will play host to it.

"Steve did a phenomenal job taking 'Slice' to a new level, from the stagnant course it had been on," Pierce said.

"Contact" unusual, entertaining epic

ASSOCIATED PRESS

At last, a summer epic with no car crashes or shootings (well, it does have one whopper of an explosion.) Instead, "Contact" stands out from the rest of the season's overinflated comic-book binges by challenging the mind and the senses.

The film resulted from the collaboration of three immensely talented individuals.

"For Carl" reads the dedication at the end of the film. Carl Sagan wrote the original story with his wife, Ann Druyan, then turned it into a highly successful novel that combined fiction with solid scientific fact. He and Miss Druyan share billing as executive producers, and he was close- Movie Review y involved until his death last December.

The third person is Robert Zemeckis, who ranks among the few directors who can combine special effects and human drama (or comedy) without slighting either. He proved his worth with the "Back to the Future" trilogy, "Who Framed Roger Rabbit" and the triumphant "Forrest Gump.

Then add to the mix Jodie Foster, whose artistry has been rewarded with Oscars for "The Accused" and "The Silence of the Lambs."

It is hard to cite any other actress who could bring such conviction to the role of Ellie Arroway. who has suffered a tragic childhood. Her mother dies in childbirth, and her father dies when the girl is 9. Ellie becomes obsessed with communicating with intelligence from other worlds, but her attempts by shortwave radio fail. So she continues her search after becoming a scientist.

Although ridiculed by colleagues, Ellie gathers a cadre of fellow believers and manages to rent a group of government-owned listening dishes. And - a breakthrough. Mysterious signals are heard, and they appear to come from a far-off star.

The rest of the film concerns what happens when the government and the public respond to Ellie's discovery. The villains: her former boss (Tom Skerritt), who steals the credit from her; National Security Adviser (James Woods), who ridicules the achievement; and a religious right zealot (Rob Lowe), who views the whole thing as anti-Christian.

In between is Ellie's former lover (Matthew McConaughey), who has become a pop religion guru. He appears to support her, yet at a presidential hearing he rejects her for a manned space probe because she refuses to say if she believes in

The flight itself becomes a phantasmagoria of effects imagery for which Zemeckis is expert.

But then, everything about "Contact" is executed on a grand scale — the effects, the crowd scenes and the high drama. Sagan's knowledge of the mysteries of space also helped immeasurably to lend authenticity to the film, though non-scientific types are entitled to a bit of head-scratching over some of the incongruities.

Foster's intense belief in her work helps smooth over the dubious patches. But McConaughey is hampered by an ambiguous role; he seems too lightweight to be a religious thinker and presidential adviser.

The villains - Woods, Skerritt and Lowe perform with good style, John Hurt is striking as the Howard Hughes-like billionaire who sponsors Foster's project, and Angela Bassett brings welcome calmness as a presidential assistant.

Oh yes, also appearing in "Contact" is one Bill Clinton, who plays himself, thanks to the wizardry Zemeckis used so winningly with other presidents in "Forrest Gump."

The Warner Bros. release was produced by Zemeckis and Steve Sharkey and written by James V. Hart and Michael Goldenberg. Rated PG, the space travel may be intense for some youngsters.

Outdoor display will be a new experience for chimpanzees ► Related Story.

For a story about the plans for the new Sunset Zoo chimpanzee habitat see Page 1.

CINDIE SNYDER

Moving to a new home can be a traumatic experience but rarely requires a tranquilizer.

As soon as the Chimpanzee Habitat is finished in August or September, five chimpanzees at Manhattan's Sunset Zoological Park will move from an out-dated building into a dream house for chimps.

Suzy, Mac, Rachel and her twins will be asleep when they are transported to their new home. It has been 15 years since the three adults have been outside.

They will all be tranquilized, given their annual physicals and moved together. After they wake up, zoo officials will give them two to four weeks to acclimate to their new home before visitors are allowed.

"It's going to be a big adjustment," Ryan Gulker, zoo curator, said. "The grass, wind, rain - all will be new to them."

The babies are expected to be more active than the adults at first. "They are more curious and not afraid of things," Scott Shoemaker, zoo director, said.

Shoemaker knows of no other zoo with an open-top outdoor habitat. He estimates the chimpanzees will be outside 75-80 percent of the time.

Even Jane Goodall, renowned chimpanzee researcher, is excited about the new chimp habitat and the zoo's twins. She has made several phone calls to zoo officials, indicating her interest in their well-being.

All the chimps but Big Mac were born in zoos. Born in Africa, Mac was brought to the St. Louis Zoo in 1970 and arrived at Sunset Zoo in 1977. Suzy was born around 1955 and came to the Sunset Zoo in 1974 from the Des Moines Children's Zoo. She is most noted by her right eye, which is covered by a cataract.

Rachel was born in 1974 at the Washington Park Zoo and arrived at Sunset Zoo in 1982. She gave birth to twin daughters June 19, 1996, and is still nursing them.

Future plans include the addition of one young male and one young female chimp. Ryan said new chimps are never brought from the wild. The zoo follows a Species Survival Plan, or SSP. Each SSP manages the breeding of a species in order to maintain a healthy and self-sustaining population.

"It is sort of a computer-dating system," Gulker said.

The system tells which animals are related to each other as well as maintaining a stud-

A studbook contains the vital records of an entire captive population of a species, including births, deaths, transfers and family lineage. Ryan said the purpose is to help preserve a genetic species.

Shoemaker feels good about the chimps and their new home. "We have a moral obligation to provide the best home, the best diets, etc.," he said. "We'll do what we can do well."

observation and features graphics and interactive activities. The dens provide nesting benches where chimps can build their resting nests out of straw and other materials.

The concrete-block building is built to withstand the strength of the chimps, who are eight to 10 times stronger than humans. Metal hooks in the walls and ceiling plates allow flexibility in the exercise room so the keepers can place a variety of play things in the room. Both natural and artificial lighting will allow the chimpanzees to experience longer days as they would in equatorial Africa.

The outdoor habitat covers 6,527 square feet. With an open-air top and 14-foot-high walls, the chimpanzees will be treated to a small pond, climbing structures, a termite mound, grass and trees. Built on eight-foot-deep cement piers, the wall will be made of glass and corrugated metal. Forty feet of the wall is made of glass for visitors' observation. A covered trellis area includes seating.

There will be two concrete termite mounds. One located on the trail will be for children while the other will be the outdoor-chimp habitat. Shoemaker said the mound is one of the behavioral enrichment items that keep the chimps stimulated. Made inhouse, the mound will simulate real termite mounds.

"In the wild, chimps fish in them for termites," Ryan Gulker, zoo curator, "Chimps are tool-users." Shoemaker said. "In this mound, they will use sticks and grass to get a variety of things from the mound.'

Keepers will provide the chimps with a variety of foods, including honey, ketchup, yogurt, mustard and hot sauce. The public as well as researchers will be able to utilize a research hut, using it as an observation point to observe the chimpanzees' activities.

'This hut will be a mock-up of huts that researchers would use in the wild," Shoemaker said

The researchers include members of ChampanZoo, a research program sponsored by the Jane Goodall Institute. The Sunset Zoo is one of only 14 institutions selected internationally to participate in this program. Manhattan has approximately 20

ChimpanZoo members.

A bricked garden will pave the outdoor-viewing plaza. A brick-sponsorship campaign helped raise approximately $60,000 in donations by selling more than 800 bricks. Twelve-thousand pounds of personalized bricks will arrive at the zoo in early August.

Underwritten by an anonymous donor couple, a life-size bronze sculpture of a chimpanzee mother and baby will grace the plaza area.

Landscaping for the African Trail has been designed by Richard Allen, landscape architect for the City of Manhattan Parks and Recreation department. Allen is compiling a list of required plants, including ferns and sumac, which will be planted by Sunset Zoo and Parks and Recreation staffs.

Ryan, who has seen 20 or 30 other chimp exhibits, is very excited about the project. "This is in the top 10 to 15 in the country," he said. "Some of them have very big budgets, too."

Peter McNeeley, Tyson's first opponent in his comeback after three years in jail for rape, thought trouble was inevitable for the former heavyweight

"Tyson had a crisis in his head and this was the way he chose to get out of it," he said. "I think something like this was bound to happen with him.

Former heavyweight champion Floyd Patterson, now chairman of the New York State Athletic Commission, applauded the Nevada decision and said Tyson's conduct was unacceptable.

"Our children now know that such a terrible display of brutality will be met with a harsh penalty, and that it will not be tolerated in any state," he said.

The campers do more than just play volleyball, however.

"Each night after we're done playing, we try to do something fun for the girls," Wiemers said. "For instance, one night may be bowling. One night might be skits and so on.'

Val Wieck, a member of the K-State volleyball team and one of the camp coaches, said one great aspect of the camp is the fact that the coaches are very personal with the women, and they try to make it fun for them.

"I like the camp because the coaches are your friends and help me one-on-one for even the littlest of mistakes," Sandi Duell, a 17-year-old from Goodland, said. "But at the same time, it's very intense."

"But it's time for the station to move on." The hope is that "Slice" will continue to expand to include bands from Western Kansas and other areas outside Manhattan and Lawrence, Pierce said.

Eric Melin, drummer for Ultimate Fake Book, said without Anthony, "Slice" is going to be weird.

"I don't want to curse the program now that Steve's gone, but it was his baby from the beginning," Melin said. Pierce said he hopes Anthony continues to book local acts. "I have no hard feelings towards Steve at all," he said.

Anthony said he would continue to work as much as possible with Manhattan bands, but he said he isn't sure what he'll do now for a job.

"They have their reasons for firing me, and I'm not going to cry over spilled milk," he said.

Melin said Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon really needs Anthony to book

Goheen said Anthony was in the audience at every show and knew and got along with nearly everyone who played in Manhattan bands.

Mike Krug, guitarist for Back Porch Mary, said he was disappointed Anthony had to leave K-Rock, but will not adversely affect the music scene. "This is not the end of the local-band scene," Krug said, "It still needs everyone's support so the radio stations will add local music to their program. The scene isn't going to get any better unless the radio plays local music."

Anthony agreed. 'It's time for someone else to pick up the ball," he said.

U.S. more prepared to battle terrorism a year after TWA 800

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK - FBI Director Louis Freeh finds the nation's skies safer and its law enforcement authorities better prepared for terrorism a year after TWA Flight 800 exploded, setting off one of the largest criminal probes in U.S. history.

Although investigators are now leaning towards mechanical failure as the cause of the explosion, they have not entirely ruled out the possibility of a crimi-

Freeh said initial fears that a terrorist might have blown up the plane led to better airport security and stronger ties between the FBI and foreign governments.

HAVE A BETTER CAPABILITY TODAY I THINK TO IDENTIFY AND PREVENT BOTH DOMESTIC AND INTERNATIONAL TERROISM3 LOUIS FREEH, FBI DIRECTOR

We have a better capability today I think to identify and prevent both domestic and international terrorism acts,"

Freeh said in a telephone interview with the Associated Press over the weekend. Freeh said the FBI investigation is in its final stages, scrutinizing holes in the skin and structure of the Flight 800 mockup. The agency expects to release its findings in 60 to 90 days.

"We are not at this point saying that we are ruling out any criminal act or act of terrorism," he said. "On the other hand, we have found no evidence of that ... hopefully, in the end, there is no criminal part to this

On Monday, investigators will conduct more tests. They've installed monitors on the fuel tanks of a Boeing 747 and will measure vibrations and temperatures under various conditions during a rigorous set

Since 1993, when Freeh took over, the FBI has quietly been improving its relationships abroad. Taking a global view of terrorism and the need to share information with other countries, Freeh has traveled to Moscow and elsewhere and added agents in Saudi Arabia, Egypt, Pakistan and other countries.

The investigation into Flight 800 intensified the drive to improve international contacts; among other things, forensic experts were brought in from England, France and Israel to evaluate evidence.

"It is paying off in terms of saved lives in counterintelligence, which is where we are extremely vulnerable here and abroad," Freeh said.

TWA Flight 800 exploded off Long Island last July 17 and fell in pieces over a 5-square-mile section of the Atlantic Ocean, killing all 230 aboard. The wreckage sank 120 feet, leaving the FBI scrambling to preserve potential evidence.

"The sketchy information we had tended to indicate that this was not an accident," he said.

For one thing, the plane had taken off from an international airport. For another, it was a Boeing 747 with a safe history, exploding without warning in midair after a seemingly flawless takeoff for Paris. Numerous witnesses also reported streaks of light, suggesting the possibility of a missile. And security in many quarters was already tighter than usual because the Olympics were being held in Atlanta.

Within hours of the explosion, FBI agents were talking to contacts around the world, trying to pin down any terrorist leads. They also worked with their counterparts at the Central Intelligence Agency, with which Freeh has tried to improve relations

After months of work, Freeh said he takes a great deal of sadness away from the probe.

"All those families touched by such a tragedy," said the soft-spoken father of five boys. "We can't put the pieces back together for them."

K-State now offers an interest-free tuition payment plan designed to give students the option to pay their tuition in four installments.

Academic Management Services was established in 1970, and more than 2 million people in more than 1,500 universities have used the program. Monthly payments are made through the program with no interest charges assessed to the balance.

Douglas Ackley, assistant at the controller's office, said the program has worked well since its implementation.

"We began offering it in fall 1996. We had 960 last fall and 700 in the spring. It's not offered in the summer," he said.

The enrollment for the program is simple, and the fees for using the services are low compared to interest charges associated with loans, Ackley said. For $50 per semester, students can divide their tuition payment into four installments to avoid taking out loans or coming up with the money in a lump sum. Yes, it provides students with another avenue to pay for college," Ackley said.

Many students in Kansas were paying for tuition with credit cards up until the state refused to allow that form of payment.

3 injured in head-on car collision

JOHN HENDERSON staff writer

A head-on crash trapped three people inside two wrecked vehicles, keeping rescue officials up late Wednesday night.

The Riley County Police Department received a report of an accident at milepost 101 on K-177 south at 9:39 p.m.

By 11:00, there were at least 20 different police, Kansas Highway Patrol, Riley County EMS, and fire-rescue vehicles from Manhattan, Ogden and Riley County Rural surrounding the crash site. RCPD officials said a Chrysler New Yorker driven by Malachi Eldridge, 19, of Council Grove, was southbound in the northbound lane of traffic when it collided head-on with a Nissan Sentra driven by Jeff Sturdy, 27, of Manhattan. Sturdy, a graduate student in human resources at K-

State, was driving with a friend, Shannon Jennings, 28, Larry Couchman, director of emergency and EMS services for Riley County and emergency services for Mercy Health Center, said two different jaws-of-life units were needed to extricate the victims. Extrication took about 90 minutes, he said, and EMS units took another 20 minutes to stabilize the victims before transporting them to hospitals.

An orthopedic surgeon was on duty, but all were freed without need for amputation, Couchman said.

Eldridge and Jennings were taken to the Mercy Health Center on College Avenue. Eldridge was treated for broken leg and foot bones. He is still at Mercy, where he is listed in fair

"He's OK, but he's got a way to go before he's all back in one piece," Vicki Livengood, house training in the area and removed the need for a LifeStar helicopter, Couchman said. Sturdy's condition has improved from critical to fair. Sturdy's brother, Clint, said his brother was in surgery for more than four hours. He said his brother had broken both legs and received a metal implant in one. Sturdy's foot and jaw were also broken, and his body was covered in lacerations, his brother said.

"He had just enough strength to open his eyes when we came in," Clint Sturdy said.

Sturdy said his brother and Jennings were returning to Manhattan from Topeka when they were hit. His brother hadn't been drinking, Sturdy said, and both apparently were wearing their seat belts.

Sgt. Robert Saber of the RCPD said investigations are still underway.

Charges filed against basketball players

SAM FELSENFELD

The Riley County Attorney filed charges last Wednesday against K-State basketball players Manny Dies and Pero Vasiljevic for the alleged attack on Collegian columnist Todd Stewart in May. Dies was charged with criminal damage to property, assault and criminal trespass. Vasiljevic was charged with assault and criminal tres-

The alleged attack took place on May 5. The incident may have stemmed from a column Stewart wrote for the Collegian. The Riley County Attorney's office originally handled the case. However, Riley County Attorney William Kennedy transferred the case to the Manhattan City Attorney's office.

Assistant City Attorney Bobby Almanza reviewed the case and sent it back to the county when he said he thought the allegations contained in the reports were too serious for the city to handle. Dies and Vasiljevic's next court appearance is scheduled for Friday at 1 p.m. at the Riley County District Court.

Methane leak leads to evacuation, 3 deaths

NEWPORT NEWS, Va. - Three workers building an aircraft carrier were killed when the compartment they were in filled with methane gas and sewage from a leaky pipe. Hundreds of others fled the giant ship.

The bodies were found shortly before midnight Saturday, said Mike Hatfield, a spokesman for Newport News Shipbuilding. The workers had been installing pipe deep inside the Harry S. Truman, six decks below the flight deck.

The causes of death were not immediately determined. Prolonged exposure to methane, a colorless, odorless gas formed by the decomposition of animal and vegetable matter, can be fatal.

The bodies were not found for nearly 12 hours. Rescue crews had to wait until air pumps cleared enough of the gas to make it safe on board, and they were hampered by liquid waste in the compartment.

All 1,800 workers on the ship when the leak was discovered at about noon were ordered to leave. Hatfield said two workers were treated and released from a hospital after complaining of inhaling the gas.

It was the first fatal accident at the shipyard since 1990, when a worker was crushed as he worked on a steel structure. The Harry S. Truman, nearly 1,100 feet long, is scheduled for delivery to the Navy in 1998.

Death toll reaches 90 in Thai hotel fire

BANGKOK, Thailand - Police have charged a coffee shop manager with negligence in the explosion that started Thailand's worst hotel fire, a newspaper reported Sunday.

Reports also said rescue workers discovered more bodies Saturday when they reentered the ruins of Royal Jomtien Resort in Pattaya - after relatives insisted loved ones still were missing. The death toll rose to 90.

Survivors also alleged that volunteer rescue workers had looted valuables from rooms and victims' bodies - a charge the rescue companies denied.

Fernandez said 39 passengers and a crew of five were on the Russian-made, twin-engine An-24 aircraft. Fernandez said there were eight non-Cubans on the flight - six Spaniards and two Brazilians.

The flight recorder will be examined by a 40-member Cuban government commission to determine the cause of the accident. Cuba's Civil Aviation Institute said that local authorities believe there were no survivors of the crash.

McNair achievement program provides undergraduate support

CONNIE SANCHEZ special to the Collegian

In fall 1995, the Ronald Erwin McNair Post Baccalaureate Achievement Program, also known as the McNair Scholars program, became an active program at K-State.

The McNair Scholars program is the fourth addition to the federally funded Trio program, which also encompasses the Educational Supportive Services, Upward Bound and Upward Bound Math Science programs.

Recognized nationally as a mechanism in helping undergraduate students pursue higher education, the McNair Scholars program encourages its participants to obtain a graduate degree.

"Working with McNair and all Trio programs is terribly exciting and fulfilling. One of my lifetime goals is to impact students' lives, and I can do that through the McNair program," Kathleen Green, director of McNair Scholars,

Originally founded by Congress in 1986, the program was designed in commemoration of the scholarly achievements completed by astronaut Ronald E. McNair, who died in the Challenger space-shuttle explosion. He was the country's second black man in space Target candidates for the McNair program are K-State sophomores and juniors. Undergraduate students who apply for the McNair Scholars Program must meet several criteria to qualify.

Candidates must have proof of U.S. citizenship or a permanent residence, be enrolled at K-State as sophomores or juniors and have at least a 3.0 GPA. In addition, applicants must be a first generation college student or from an ethnic group that is currently under-represented in their graduate field of study.

McNair helps prepare scholars for graduate school, helps them choose the right school for them, provides information on financing and gives scholars funding for national conferences.

'We have good individual contact with students. They like that we're very available. Students are excited that we're working with them," Laura Ciccantell, student services coordinator, said.

McNair Scholars follow a meticulously constructed academic-success Within the first 10 days following

During their junior year, the scholars receive preparation for the GRE and other entrance exams. Tutoring and seminars are also provided.

"We're all concerned with helping the scholars do the best they can academically," Barbara Baker, academic services coordinator, said.

Before the McNair Scholars finish their undergraduate studies, they participate in a summer research internship. For eight weeks, the scholar works under the guidance of their faculty mentor to complete a research project. The topic relates to the scholars' proposed graduate studies.

After successful completion of their research, scholars may submit their papers for publication. They may also compete for the opportunity to present their research before the graduates at the McNair Spring Banquet.

Seely said the recycling market is limited in Manhattan.

"In large metropolitan areas. there is a tremendous market for recycling," he said. "Money is given for more materials."

Ott said he encourages everyone to recycle.

"When you purchase products, look for products that are made from recycled materials," he said.

Seely said everyone can help the environment.

"We wish our program was funded. Until then we will continue with the program, but students should be reminded that they can all do their part in helping out the environment,"

Current problems overlooked during campus renovations

ple and white flowers sway in the summer breeze outside several buildings at K-State, desktops are becoming unhinged from chairs in lecture halls and lights are burning out.

Or late at night, a student attempts to use an emergency phone, only to find it's out of

Some buildings on campus are looking mighty fine these days, while others are hile the very patriotic purbeing overlooked and not looking quite as mighty fine as they should.

> Can K-State Facilities make improvements on campus while maintaining things we already have? It seems not.

> A well-groomed campus is certainly a plus, but students could benefit far more from lights and desks that work, than they could from crabgrass-free landscaping.

> It's all in the details. When push comes to shove, students would probably prefer lights in the K-State Student Union parking lot at midnight than to have grass mowed in nice, even lines.

On the plus side, getting around our quaintly trimmed campus is much easier now, thanks to clearly marked buildings. Also, with the new reserved parking signs, it's much more obvious to drivers where they can and can't park.

These improvements, though they may not be of the same magnitude as renovations made to the Union, are the improvements that make life at this University that much easier. The small features that help things run smoothly, though they may go unnoticed on a day-to-day basis, are the things sorely missed when they are missing or out

The flowers are nice to look at, but wellmaintained facilities are what really bring smiles to the faces at K-State.

Government has no place in child rearing corner of your TV screen that said, "TV-PG," "TV-14" or something similar. This box was intended to give parents a guideline to rate the television program so they could decide whether or not the program is suitable for children.

Last week the government decided the ratings system currently in use was not comprehensive enough and a new system needed to be created that would give parents some insight as to the content of the program. This new ratings system will be a waste of both time and money.

They want letters such as "V," "S," "L" and "D" to appear next to the ratings to let the parents know the program contains violence, sex and language that could be offensive and dialogue with sexual innuendoes.

Here is one more way in which people are trying to get the government to step in and care for their kids.

This new television ratings system is not going to do anything to keep those kids who are left unattended by their parent from watching violent programming. Just like the bout six months ago, a box current ratings system, a 7-year-old could appeared in the upper left hand easily watch a program rated "TV-14" or "TV-M" while his parents are not there. Parents need some control of their children. It is up to parents to be sure their kids watch suitable programming. Those parents who don't care what their kids watch aren't going suddenly say, This program con-MATT SPURGIN is a senio tains violence - you (mattspu@ksu.edu) can't watch it," just because of a new rating system. The parents who already care are going to be the ones who use the system to monitor the kids' TV watching. But if they care that much, they should just sit down and spend the time with the kids and watch the programs their children watch.

We don't need the government to step in and force the TV industry to implement the ratings, which is pretty much what they did. Legislators, including Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, signed a letter that assured the industry that senate would head off attempts to force stronger ratings.

A V-Chip is not the answer either. My parents tried to lock channels out of the television even before the V-Chip. I soon figured out the code to unlock the channel, but I still wasn't able to watch that channel when my parents were around - which was most of the time

ABC, CBS, FOX and major cable networks have agreed to this deal, but NBC has not agreed to the plan yet. They said they don't feel that the government has any business interfering with what people watch. I agree with NBC. People can make up their own minds as to whether they want to watch the program or if they want their kids to watch it. The government is basically stepping in and forcing their regulations on the industry by agreeing there will be no legislation for several years to require family programming.

I don't need the government to tell me what type of programming is suitable for children. When I have children, I will decide what I want them to watch and what is not suitable for them.

And kids know if they can't watch certain things at their houses, they usually have a friend whose parents will let them watch those shows at their house.

Ratings can be subjective, depending on the person making the ratings, and I really doubt that the same group of people would be able to rate every single program that comes out.

Television is not a baby-sitter. You can't just plop your kids down in front of it to keep them occupied.

If parents are worried about what their children are watching, they should sit down with their kids at least once in a while and watch the program with them.

If the program seems suitable a couple of times, then it is probably all right to let the kids watch the program.

But if that is so much of a problem, the video stores have plenty of those Barney videos.

Columnist provides tips for avoiding bicyclists

hy do smart people do stupid things? K-State is an institution of higher education. Those who trod upon these almost-hallowed grounds have, by virtue of their presence, a degree of mental fortitude. They are capable of acts of unparalleled brilliance.

The next thing you know, they're riding two abreast on bicycles down a sidewalk a few feet from a perfectly viable roadway, letting the pedestrians abandon the sidewalk in favor

Now, let's be perfectly fair. I'm not saying that everyone who owns a bicycle slaps on some flame decals, gets a head of steam and starts bouncing gleefully off pedestrians until they arrive at their destination like an errant pinball. And I'm not going to whine about the fact that most bicyclists in Manhattan don't signal. Most cars in Manhattan don't signal, and more bicyclists than cars look where they're going. But we don't remember the 500 bicycles that go safely whirring by on their merry way. We remember the one wayward biker, a streak of indistinguishable color, whose beard leaves rug burn on your arm as he barrels by on his way to an Anarchist Society of America

He's just as deadly as the half-awake incoherent taking-

Ken at (sigma7@ksv.edu). twenty-hours-to-graduate student who, in her blind rush to flee K-State as soon as possible, must make it from Cardwell to Nichols in two minutes and can vaguely discern the gray shape of sidewalk in her caffeine-enhanced gaze. If someone with equally sluggish responses is coming the opposite direction, too bad - they're gone with the Schwinn. Bicycles, of course, are much more elusive than ordinary forms of transportation. In a college town such as this, there's nothing that blends speed and agility like a lightweight 10speed doing Mach 2 through an alley or between hedges. If they do something wrong, there's no license to write down or way to pull them over. The best way to stop a full-bore bicycle is to stand around and wait for it to run into you.

If, however, your medical insurance provider has gotten used to that sort of story, there are other tactics to take. The easiest is to have a friend stand by and wait for the bike to hit them. Climb a tree while waiting for the collision.

If attempting to elude a two-wheeled pursuer, your best bet remains groups of people. The Summer Adventure platoons moseying from building to building provide densely-packed but lightweight obstacles. Be advised it may take more than one of these tykes to disrupt your pursuer. It may require an even denser, immobile, utterly monolithic obstacle to dislodge a devoted bicyclist. Best bet is to wait for the Board of Regents to swing through town.

But should worst come to worst and you do end up seeing stars and blue sky following an intimate moment with the Red Baron of the Flint Hills, remember that you were not run over by a riderless bicycle (let's hope).

The bicycle is nothing more or less than an instrument through which personal irresponsibility can be channeled and focused. The actions are not of the bicycle but of its rider, and they aren't all alike.

The people responsible for breaking the sound barrier in a horde of pedestrians are the same people who stand in the aisles of the K-State Student Union Bookstore and read the books, cover to cover, moving to let people by - but picking up the book and continuing to read it while the poor befuddled shoppers need to maneuver around this piece of human cholesterol

They're the same people who idle in the lanes of the parking lots, waiting for a space to appear and hell-bent on making life difficult for anyone who just wants to get by. To turn the tables, they're the same people who decide that the sidewalk is the perfect place to hold an outdoor conversation.

Before going on a full-fury whine-fest about a bicycle, remember that it's not an independent entity - it has a rider who must be held responsible in whatever fashion his or her actions deserve.

Just carry a sledgehammer and remember — bicycles don't kill people, but people can kill bicycles.

"Television is not a baby-sitter.

You can't just plop your kids down in front of it to keep them occupied."

• BAILEY'S COLUMNS JUST REPETITIVE PREACHING

I am a student at K-State and an avid reader of the Collegian's editorial pages. I have always respected and been impressed with the topics and diversity Collegian columnists offer their readers. However, recently the columns of Kevin Bailey have taken a dramatic turn.

Bailey's work, which usually has a moral or religious slant linked to a timely issue, has deteriorated to repetitive preaching. I am a Christian and agree with Bailey on many issues. I also realize that the place for Bailey's columns, especially the two most recent, 'Coming out of the closet" and "Uncovering the facts behind the story of an unborn fetus," belong on a Sunday morning church pulpit and not the pages of a news-The religious ravings that Bailey writes draws away from the obvious talent he has as a writer. It also insults readers of religious faiths who do not share his Christian viewpoint. I hope he mainstreams his opinions for future endeavors in commentary writing.

A NINE-HOLE COURSE WITH A PAR OF 30 DEBUTS IN MANHATTAN, MAKING IT TIME TO

course, but don't be fooled. This is not a par-three course.

Today the Wildcat Creek Executive Golf Course opened to the public, bringing Manhattan golfers their first taste of life without the dreaded par fives.

It's a nine-hole course with a total par of only 30, with a mere total distance of 2,050 yards. But Wildcat Creek is the only non-traditional course in the area — par for the course is far less than four strokes per hole.

It is this setup that makes golfers of all skill levels competitive, without the repetitiveness of an all par-three course.

So, with that, here's all the holeby-hole info needed to succeed on Manhattan's newest golf course.

HOLE ONE

Purple Tees: 334 yards White Tees: 301 yards Par: 4 This short par-four hole offers a good scoring chance early. A deep creek directly in front of the tee boxes must be taken out of play, but it still makes for a very straight hole. Also, be careful of the overhead lines in front of the tee box. They can also make for tough second shots

HOLE TWO

Purple Tees: 141 yards White Tees: 109 yards Par: 3

This easy green is surrounded by deep grass and trees on the right and left. Two bunkers protect the green short, and a big drop off on the back of the green can make for a difficult tee shot. Once on the green, easy-toread putts give chances to

HOLE THREE

Purple Tees: 174 yards White Tees: 120 yards Par: 3

This large green tempts golfers to make courageous shots, but a miss left or a miss long can result in probable drops in the thick grass and trees. Hitting the ball short is the safe bet, but it doesn't yield great scoring opportunities.

HOLE FOUR

Purple Tees: 344 yards White Tees: 291 yards Par: 4

This dogleg-right hole can be either a golfer's best friend or worst enemy. A creek runs along the front of the tee boxes, and a forest protects the right side. It is easy to be tempted to cut off some of the dogleg, but hitting over the batch of trees leaves little room for error. It's the best scoring opportunity the course.

HOLE FIVE

Both Tees: 128 yards Par: 3

This short par three plays relatively easy, but with the green off slightly to the back and right, out-of-bounds is a realistic possibility. Left is safe, but from there a birdie is almost out of the question.

HOLE SIX

Purple Tees: 363 yards White Tees: 323 yards Par: 4

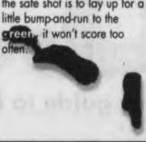

This dogleg left is the longest hole on the course, and fairway bunkers along the left make cutting off part of the dogleg a tough chore.

The key is to stay out of trouble. The herd of cows along the right side of the fairway make for interesting company and sound effects on the hole.

HOLE SEVEN

Purple Tees: 189 yards White Tees: 173 yards Par: 3

This long par three is the most difficult hole on the course. Playing from the white tees leaves a blind shot to the green. Out-of-bounds line both sides of the fairway, and while the safe shot is to lay up for a little bump-and-run to the green, it won't score too

HOLE EIGHT

Purple Tees: 207 yards White Tees: 167 yards Par: 3

Again, the creek in front of the tee boxes can be intimidating, but the hole plays pretty straightforward. This is the most difficult green on the course, and sometimes the player who just missed the green will be better off than the person storing at the 65-foot uphill put with a tough right-to-left break. Definitely a test of mind and

HOLE NINE

Purple Tees: 170 yards White Tees: 98 yards Par: 3

Playing from the whites offers the rare opportunity to tee-off with a wedge, and the big green gives golfers-plenty of room to work with. This hole plays very short and is the easiest on the course. The bunkers shouldn't come into play, and this finishing hole gives golfers a chance to end their day with a good score.

JEFF PALMER

With many of last season's players lost to the Major League draft and to graduation, K-State's baseball team continued to rebuild with the recent signing of four junior-college transfers.

Mike Clark, baseball coach, said the team needed experienced players to contribute right away.

This year, we went out and looked for people to step in and help immediately," Clark said.

The signees included three players from California and one from Butler County Community College.

Sterling Bullock comes to the Wildcats after an impressive career in a junior college in California. Bullock was a two-time secondteam all-South Coast Conference selection and brings a big stick to the Wildcat lineur

"Sterling Bullock is a third baseman who has got some pop with his bat, and he always plays extremely hard," said Clark.

K-State beat out perennial powers Florida, Florida State and Cal-State Fullerton in the recruitment of catcher Chet Savage.

Clark said Savage was probably the best available catcher in community college.

Savage, who comes to K-State via Riverside Community College, was a two-time All-Conference selection and received Defensive-Player-of-the-Year honors last year.

"Chet is a quality ballplayer, and he and Yancey (Ayres) will give us tremendous catching next year," Clark said.

Another California ballplayer coming to K-State is Andrew Silva, an outfielder and pitcher from Los Angeles Harbor College.

Silva helped lead his team to the South Coast Conference Championship in 1997, breaking a single season school record for at-bats along the way. "Silva is a good lead-off hitter who sets the table offensively. He can play right or center field because he has good speed," Clark Clark said Silva will be able to contribute in more than one way. "Andrew is also a good right-handed pitcher, and we plan to use him as an outfielder and as a pitcher," said Clark.

Also coming to K-State is Clint Merrick, who pitched for Butler County last year.

Merrick, who received All-State honors as a senior at El Dorado High School, had a 6-2 record with 38 strikeouts for Butler

'Clint Merrick is a good pitcher, and we expect him to compete for a starting position and be a contributor to our ball club," Clark

Clark said K-State still has a couple letters of intention left to come in, but with the signing of these four players, K-State's roster is near completion.

Acting poor in Tyson-Holyfield license debate

Oh, what a show.

I almost feel guilty for writing about the latest saga in the Mike Tyson-Evander Holyfield drama for this section, because it's not really sports.

Actually, it was just a well-scripted drama with a well-developed plot. Call this a review.

To be honest, I don't know for a fact that this "bite" thing was a set-up. These are just my opin-ions, But I'm a pretty smart guy, and I've never been wrong before.

Scene two from "Tyson-Holyfield: The Bite" was performed poorly with terrible acting. The scene was broadcast to the world last Wednesday from the chambers of the Las Vegas City Council. During this episode, the Nevada Boxing Commission revoked Tyson's boxing license and fined him $3 million.

Sure, it seems like it's real. Tyson was messed up, the system worked quickly and now the man with the mile-long rap sheet is paying the price. But let's look at this closely. The only people being punished or losing any money are the fans. We're the fools paying for this circus. Yeah, I'll admit it — I paid $55 to watch the fight on pay-per-view, and I'll probably do it again. But I got exactly what I wanted - an entertaining show with an unthinkable ending. I'm not bitter about the money I spent. I'm just serving as a public watchdog, to keep you informed in case you have doubts about the legitimacy of any future fights. To those of you World Wrestling Federation watchers who think this whole thing is real — that Tyson was fined the maximum amount because he robbed Americans out of $200 million - keep Tyson didn't really lose any money. He wasn't fined $3 million - he earned $27 million.

Nobody lost money here, except for us foolish

Don King? He won't have any problems putting food on the table.

And Holyfield? As reigning heavyweight champion, he's got at least three or four gimmee fights against tomato cans coming - total paychecks, $100 million.

Tyson won't make any money this year, but he should be able to get by on his $27 million.

This year will be a vacation for Tyson — a year to train, relax, travel and spend time with his family. The Nevada Boxing Commission tried to make its audience think he's being punished. But its members spoke their lines horribly. This was the first part of the saga that wasn't believable to conscious viewers.

You'd think members of the commission wouldn't have to read their opinions off typed sheets. During the course of legitimate discussion and debate, arguments should flow freely - that is, unless the debate is really a show and the actors can't memorize their lines.

That's what happened here. In Hollywood, they call those sheets that the commission members were using "scripts." Wednesday was just an example of bad acting. Actors should know their

Also, what kind of ever-powerful governing body doesn't even have its own office?

The Nevada Boxing Commission had to hold the meeting in Las Vegas City Council chambers. This body is so knowlegeable and powerful that it made this decision, resulting in a seven-digit fine and indefinitely denying a man the ability to work. They are the final authority, but they don't even have an office. Oh, and they made this decision in one hour.

All the testimony was heard, all the evidence was presented, and the panel reached a decision in one hour. Granted, this probably didn't need to drag out as long as the O.J. Simpson trial. But one hour? At least the jury from the Simpson criminal trial, notorious for its rush to judgment, deliberated for longer than an hour. And do you really think Mike Tyson would not show up to these proceedings if he had to fight for his right to work? He stands to lose more than $50 million in lost wages as a result of these proceedings, yet he was off in New York buying a Ferrari. And after all this, he's not even taking any legal action. The Nevada Boxing Commission, in this adventure, is the final authority. Forget about the U.S. justice system or any possible chain of appeals.

The commission handed down its ruling, so now King and Tyson will take the decision and move on. You'd think King and Tyson - both convicted felons - would know about the legal system. Tyson, as a Las Vegas resident, should gamble $1 million in legal fees for the chance to earn

$50 million in two fights this year. Not a chance. The script, although complex and puzzling, doesn't have a strong backbone and wouldn't hold up in court. Tyson would be back to fighting and boxing's public image would suffer. You'd think we'd all remember this when Tyson-Holyfield III rolls around next year, and Don King asks us to pay $50 to watch Wrestlemania

Just ask Roberto Alomar, the Baltimore Orioles' second baseman - notorious and hated for spitting in an umpire's face last season. He just started in baseball's All-Star Game last week.

And we all know how he got the start - he was elected by the fans.

Each pizza place in Manhattan has about the same prices, but each has a unique quality they believe makes them better than all

Aggieville Pizza owner Dan Wild said, We are unique because we are the only pizza place in town that's not a franchise. There is only one Aggieville Pizza in the world, and it's in Manhattan, Kansas." Wild says this attracts customers because people have never had an Aggieville Pizza before, and they want to try something different. At Breadeaux Pizza, a person can choose from one of 18 different toppings, or choose a specialty pizza that offers additional top-

Lane in the Candlewood Shopping Center. Hot Stuff offers personal pizzas, and Rebecca Stewart, an employee at Dara's, says there are always pizzas ready.

"It's very convenient. There are a wide variety of choices and they are always ready for the customer's convenience," she said

"Besides, we have everything else Dara's sells, plus subs and ice cream.

The only pizza establishment without seating is Domino's, but that is part of what makes it so good, says Doug Fritz, owner of Domino's.

"We are the delivery experts. We don't have to worry about a sit down restaurant, and that allows us to get the order to your door in a fast and safe manner," Fritz said.

John Ihrig, senior in architectural engineering, said, "I grew up on Domino's and that is still what I like to eat. They deliver fast and the pizza is good."

One of the newest additions to the pizza business in Manhattan is Gambino's. Paul Suellentrop, one of the owners, said that Gambino's pizzas have more value than the other pizza places in town.

"We're not inexpensive, but our pizzas are cheap for the amount you receive. You get a lot more pizza at Gambino's than at anywhere else.'

The special pizza at Gambino's is the Mobster that is made with 11 different toppings. "Our large Mobster, which is 15 inches, is cheaper than Pizza Hut's Super Supreme which is only 14 inches, and you get more pizza with the Mobster," said Suellentrop

Another national chain that has been serving Manhattan residents for over 15 years is Godfather's Pizza. Godfather's owner Dave Umscheid says they don't only cater to students.

"We've been an established business in Aggieville for 15 years, and we like to think we have the best pizza. While some pizza places cater to the students only, we try to cater to the whole town, students and townspeople," said Umscheid.

Godfather's also offers sandwiches, a salad bar and a choice of four different appetizers.

One pizza restaurant in Manhattan that may be as popular for their other foods as much for their pizza is Greek's Pizzeria.

"I've eaten their pizza once, and I liked it but their gyros are excellent," said Jennifer Conley, senior in early childhood education. Gyros are just one of the many things biggest advantage. With one restaurant on each end of town, and one right in the middle in Aggieville, there is a Pizza Hut close no matter where

"Pizza Hut pizza is the best. It always has been. The crust is great, and it's always cooked just right. I don't mind paying a little extra money because their pizza is that much better," said Jennifer Basler, senior in philosophy Pizza Hut also offers pasta, a salad bar and sandwiches but they are famous for their pizzas, including the original stuffedcrust pizza and the triple decker pizza.

Last but not least is the name made famous by college students, Pizza Shuttle.

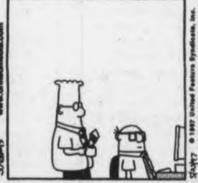

Pizza Shuttle is open late at night for those studying or those partying.
"That's what we're about," said Dick Botbyl, owner of Shuttle. "We try to be the best value for the students.'

So no matter what you prefer, pizza or not, there is something in Manhattan for everyone. Just look around and everyone will be able to find something that agrees with them.

Workshops bring ag to classes

Knowledge of the agricultural industry has blossomed through the Ag in the Classroom program at K-

The two-week session started June 30 and ended July 11. Workshops and tours from different areas of the College of Agriculture were featured in the session. Twenty-eight teachers from grade schools to high schools attended the 1997 session.

"We wanted them to know that agriculture is science-based and flavored with business," David Mugler, associate dean and director of academic programs in the College of Agriculture, said.

Ag in the Classroom was conceived in 1982 when educators in agricultural organizations and the College of Agriculture were concerned that many people didn't understand agriculture is more than farming.

The workshop was established at K-State in 1985 for teachers of kindergarteners to 12th graders. Since the first session, more than 900 teachers have participated in the program.

The mission of the workshops was to help teachers become better acquainted with the extensiveness of agriculture and help them integrate it into their work.

Twenty-one teachers attended sessions, which were instructed or supported by K-State agriculture faculty and ag organizations. Mugler said the 1985 session was Ag in the Classroom sessions have also taken place in Kansas City, Wichita and Hays since the program's first session in 1985.

Workshop tours vary with the location, Mugler said. The Kansas City session tours the Kansas Board of Trade while the Wichita tours have included nurseries and meat processing plants. The Hays session toured an ostrich farm.

"Hands-on teaching at the workshops is what the teachers want," workshop instructor Janice Swanson

Swanson, an associate professor in animal sciences and industry, has taught sessions since 1992. She said she is a big supporter of the program. "I believe it's a very good thing," she said.

She has taught sessions in Kansas City, Wichita and Manhattan. The title of her workshop at K-State is "Animal Welfare in the Classroom." It deals with the handling and use of animals in classrooms.

Swanson said the population needs to know about food production and the science aspect of agriculture in order to have educated opinions about agriculture.

She said schools can be the primary place for students to learn about animals - especially in urban areas. Students in these areas might have a limited understanding of animals ranging from domestic pets to animals in zoos or wildlife shows

The use of production animals such as swine, cattle, sheep and poultry can be very foreign to them, she said. So teachers have requested hands-on projects so they can bring them to their classes.

Swanson said working with animals in the classroom can help students become acquainted with them at an early age. Projects with animals can become more complex, so students learn more as they mature.

NBC lone holdout to new TV-rating system

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK - Only one network is holding out against the new TV-rating - the one more Americans

The lone holdout is being hailed by those who oppose the system, but some advocates and industry analysts predict NBC will ultimately bow to Washington

"This is a temporary temper

Under terms of the agreement reached last week, by Oct. 1 rival net-works will add "V," "S," "L" and "D" to denote violence, sex, offensive language and suggestive dialogue to the age-based ratings that now flash in the corner of TV screens at the start of most pro-

"We feel very strongly that government and special interests shouldn't be dictating what's on television," NBC spokeswoman Beth Comstock said.

NBC fears parents may eventually block all shows with a rating deemed offensive, regardless of individual show

"Their programming is very specifically directed to hip, young, urban people," said Gene DeWitt of DeWitt Media, which buys advertising time for companies, "So I think it would be a really serious blow to them if they somehow felt this would force them to water down their programming or take less money from advertisers.

Labeling shows like "Friends" for suggestive dialogue could also be costly for NBC when it comes time to sell it for syndication, Chester said, since some stations might be reluctant to broadcast such shows during afternoon hours.

NBC insists its decision to oppose the new ratings system was made on principle, not economics.

The network has been cheered by writers and producers who dislike the "NBC is to be commended for refusing to cave in," said Dorothy Swanson of Viewers for Quality Television. ABC President Robert Iger said the Disney-owned company also opposed governmental interference, but wanted to help concerned parents and also because it concluded the new ratings wouldn't affect programming decisions.

"If 'NYPD Blue' were pitched to us today, we would treat it the same way we treated it four years ago, regardless of what rating we expect that it would get," Iger said.

Groups backing the new ratings have no plans to boycott NBC because they remain confident the network will join later, said Kathryn Montgomery, president of the Center for Media Education.

NBC will likely change its position in time because there are no strong economic reasons not to, DeWitt said, since strong ratings don't appear to drive viewers or advertisers away from hit using micro-surfacing. "It's fast drying, but very difficult to lay. But three-eighths of an inch of micro-surface equals 1-1/2 inches of regular asphalt," Vance said.

Vance said the process has been "The technology came from Germany over 12 years ago. The Kansas Department of Transportation has been using it on the highways for about 10 years." He said.

The cost for the Manhattan overlay was $150,000, Vance said.

Although this is the first time Manhattan has used this process, Deborah Berry, engineering aid II for Manhattan, said the City has been satisfied.

"We are very pleased with the results," she said.

Darrin Soper, 28, Manhattan, was stabbed at 8:05 p.m. Tuesday in the parking lot across the street from Ahearn Field House.

Michael Stephenson, a juvenile, was arrested Wednesday on charges of aggravated battery. He was transported to the Juvenile Detention Center in Junction City, where he awaits his preliminary Soper was waiting in front of the building for his wife who was coming from her water-aerobics class at the Natatorium.

While en route, Soper said he came to a stop sign in the Westloop area and noticed four teenagers in a car at the same stop sign. He said he didn't give the group more than a passing glance.

We did not make any gestures or anything at the stop sign," he said.

However, the youths began to tailgate Soper's car, he said. Soper said when he pulled into cam-

Vet professor's memorial service attracts throngs of mourners

101 No. 163

So many of Sam Kruckenberg's friends and students joined his family at his memorial service Wednesday morning at Peace Lutheran Church that they overflowed the sanctuary and spilled into the chapel.

Pastor Vance Eckstrom said in his sermon that Kruckenberg knew everyone on the K-State campus and Manhattan.

This is partly because he spent most of his life in Manhattan, working for three degrees from K-State starting in 1957, then joining the faculty in the College of Veterinary Medicine, where he worked as an instructor, researcher, assistant professor, associate professor and, finally, in 1981, a full professor in the department of pathology. Youth-facility funding OK'd by commission

NATE JENKINS

Funding for a new youth facility that will be jointly supervised by Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan and the Boys & Girls Club was approved by the Manhattan City Commission Tuesday.

The $150,000 grant, which is the first step in financing the project, will be used for construction costs, but will only be donated after the clubs raise $229,000.

Currently, they are awaiting word from the state on the status of their request for a $1-million community block-grant that would help the project.

The facility, proposed to be connected to the south end of the gymnasium at the Ninth Grade Center on Poyntz Avenue, is the idea of several local groups that feel a multipurpose building is needed to serve children, teenagers and the homeless in the community.

Mike Otto, director of the Manhattan Boys & Girls Club, said the facility would provide space large enough for group activities and small enough for separate areas suited for Big Brothers and Big Sisters.Otto also said the building would provide employment opportunities, especially for K-State students and graduates.

"It will be a great opportunity for people majoring in education, or who have graduated, to get some experience working with kids,"

The commission also approved a $346,500 offer from a Nebraska real estate agency, Cormack Real Estate, to buy the tract of land at the intersection of Tuttle Creek Boulevard and Leavenworth Street. The property was formerly occupied by Panda Paradise and Taco Rape suspect escapes from state mental hospital

LARNED - A rape suspect being evaluated at a state mental hospital is missing after apparently walking away from the central Kansas facility.

Patrick E. Morrison, 20, of Hutchinson, escaped from the Larned State Hospital between 7 and 8 p.m. Monday.

Morrison was to appear Tuesday in Reno County on five felony charges, including rape of a 13-year-old girl in Hutchinson.

Morrison had been committed to Larned for evaluation by the court after threatening suicide. He had been staying in one of two 30patient dorms and apparently walked out a door to the unfenced grounds.

Morrison also faces probation violation charges.

Police looking for elusive suspected serial killer in Versace shooting

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. - The FBI combed gay bars and hotels in trendy South Beach Wednesday, believing the suspected serial killer thought to have gunned down designer Gianni Versace hadn't gone far.

As many as 400 agents focused on catching Andrew Phillip Cunanan, who is suspected in as many as four other slayings nationwide. He is one of the FBI's 10 most wanted fugitives. Versace died Tuesday morning on the sun-soaked streets of South Beach. Police said a gunman shot the 50-year-old Italian designer in the back of the head twice at close range. Cunanan, 27, who was once described by his mother as a high-priced prostitute, is suspected in the slayings of four men from Minneapolis to New Jersey.

City Hall gadfly accused of attacking official with hatchet

BUFFALO, N.Y. - A man who frequently visited City Hall to challenge Buffalo's environmental policies attacked a city employee with a hatchet, putting a one-inch gash in the victim's forehead.

Vincent J. DiPasquale, 56, was arrested immediately. He was jailed on charges of assault and possession of a weapon.

Anthony Luppino, 47, a Planning Division employee, received stitches after the attack in his office Tuesday.

DiPasquale worked as a biologist in West Virginia before waging an unsuccessful bid for Congress in 1982. But in recent years he had become familiar to many City Hall employees as a frequent caller and visitor.

Cosby admits seeking paternity test and backing out

NEW YORK - Bill Cosby testified that he so badly wanted to know whether 22-year-old Autumn Jackson was his daughter that he once proposed taking a paternity test but backed out because he feared for his reputation.

At another point Tuesday in Jackson's extortion trial. Cosby testified that he gave $100,000 over the past 20 years to her mother Shawn Upshaw because she implied she might reveal their brief 1970s affair.

Cosby's revelation Tuesday that he considered a paternity test came during cross-examination in Jackson's trial. She is accused of trying to extort $40 million from him by telling the tabloids that she is his daughter.

Cosby now declines to take a blood test to determine paternity, and the judge has ruled the issue irrelevant.

Jury awards $26.6 million to exec fired over 'Seinfeld' comments

MILWAUKEE - A former Miller Brewing Co. executive was awarded $26.6 million by jurors who decided he did not deserve to be fired for telling a female co-worker about a "Seinfeld" episode with a racy plot twist.

Jerold Mackenzie was fired from his $95,000-a-year job in 1993 after he told Patricia Best about the episode and she com-

Mackenzie, who called his comments an attempt to share humor, was relieved by Tuesday's verdict. He had sought $9.2 million in damages.

The award includes $24.5 million against Miller, $1.5 million against Best and $601,500 against Miller executive Robert Smith. Of the total, $18 million was punitive.

Miller said it would appeal. Best left court without commenting.

Mir commander bounced from space station repair job

MOSCOW - Russian space officials declared the commander of the Mir space station unfit for a grueling repair job and said Wednesday that a U.S. astronaut would begin training to replace him.

However, NASA officials said it was premature to say astronaut Michael Foale would participate in the delicate mission into a sealed-off module that was punctured last month in a collision with a cargo ship.

While Russian officials insisted that Foale would begin training and was clearly delighted by the prospect, they also said they wouldn't decide until next week whether he would actually participate in the repair mission.

IVAN KOZAR/Collegia EDDIE DUNSWORTH, blood service nurse, draws blood from a patient at Pottorf Hall in CiCo Park. The American Red Cross will be at Pottorf Hall

Blood drive continues on campus

BRIAN MCGINLEY

The American Red Cross is conducting a community blood drive in Pottorf Hall at Cico

The goal for the blood drive is 250 units, which is comparable to amounts received in the past.

Previous drives at Pottorf Hall have collected 250-285 units, and this year Red Cross officials said they hope to see the same.

The number of donations usually goes down in the summer with school being out and people on vacation, but they still have a good turn out, said Beryl Adams, executive director of the Riley County chapter of the American Red Cross. During the school year, the amount of blood collected at the K-State Student Union is always exceptional "Historically, K-State has collected more blood than KU, and there is a traveling trophy that we have to prove it," she said.

Blood drives in this area are coordinated out of Wichita. Adams said a chapter representative from Wichita works with people in the community to get everything organized.

Dates for the events depend entirely on the availability of the buildings used. Volunteers are needed to help the blood-mobile staff, and callers are also needed to solicit potential

As many as 25 local volunteers are needed along with 15 staff members to conduct the drive, Adams said. The staff comes from Wichita and is comprised primarily of doctors

Adams said the volunteers and donors make the drive possible

"We are totally dependent on the generosity of the community," she said. Only two staff members are on the payroll at the American Red Cross in Manhattan. The rest are volun-

The process of giving blood involves a screening of health records by donors' names. This is done to make sure they are potential donors and their blood isn't tainted.

Next, health-history questions are asked about donors' lifestyles to make sure the blood is safe. Finally, a sample of blood is taken from a prick on donors' ears for testing. Once that is complete, the actual donation process starts, and lasts only about ten minutes.

Sue Feltner, Riley resident and first-time donor, said giving blood can be a little scary, but it's important for people to do.

"It didn't hurt a bit," she said. Jana Shockey, charge person and RN for the Red Cross, said the turnout so far this year has been good. "We've had a really good flow of donors this time, even better than the drive in April," Manhattan has a total of 10 blood drives a year, and each one is a success, Adams said. "People in the community are great, they understand the need for the donations," she

Thefts occur in Jardine parking lots on July 11

Parking lots C-9 and C-11 of Jardine Terrace Apartments were sites of thefts resulting in an estimated loss of more than $1,000, the night of July

Four automobiles were damaged and burglarized, and K-State Police are investigating the thefts under the assumption that they are related.

"They appear to be related," Sgt. Richard Herrman of campus police said. "The times and method of entry seem to be similar."

Problems in the Jardine parking lots are nothing new, said resident Valarie Christopher, who was one of the victims Friday night. "It's very unsafe," she said. "There have been a lot of vandalism and thefts ever since May. My car has been vandalized three times.'

Christopher said her concerns with the parking lots include poor lighting, lack of video cameras and rare police patrols.

"We just received a light at the end of the stairwell," she said. "But the parking lot is not very well lit. Lighting is excellent in the dormitory parking lots, but here it's very dark."

Herrman disagreed. "They're well lit in terms of parking," he said. "And this time of year those particular parking lots are patrolled more than others on campus since there are people living there in the summer.'

Herrman said part of the problem with Jardine parking lots, which includes lots C-05 through C-16, is the way the parking lots are aligned.

"Due to the configuration, it is difficult to patrol," he said. "A police car can make one turn and be completely out of sight of another lot. A person could wait for an officer to drive by and then immediately go after cars. There's no place for us to just sit and watch the entire area like there is in other parking lots."

The setup of the lots also prevents the use of video cameras.

"The lots are small and various so it would take numerous cameras at quite a large expense," he

But none of these reasons satisfy Christopher, whose car has been vandalized with items such as ketchup, mustard and shaving cream.

'When we have parking problems, they're not addressed," she said. "They say, 'Well, we're making changes.' When you call about vandalism, they say, 'You have insurance, right?"

Herrman, however, said that many incidents can be prevented through common sense.

"Don't leave packages or such things in your car," he said. "Some of the cars that were broken into had compact discs and checkbooks in plain site. Vehicle owners need to take precautions.

K-State plant experiments return from space aboard Columbia

A green thumb may not be a prerequisite, but having one won't hinder a group of K-State researchers' experiments in space.

The Space Shuttle Columbia, which was scheduled to land at 5:47 a.m. today, is returning dozens of experiments, including two from K-State.

The project involves a very special box and some highly-prized plants.

Measuring one cubic foot, this $1million box is a project of BioServe Space Technologies' program. Started in 1987, BioServe is a NASA Commercial Space Center comprised of 13 K-State Division of Biology scientists teamed with engineering scientists from the University of Colorado.

The box, a Plant Generic Bioprocessing Apparatus, or PGBA, is a mini-greenhouse. Made of plexiglass with metal components, the box contains a cooling system, humidity system, light source and miniature video camera. Built by the University of Colorado, the box contains 10 experiments.

Two experiments originated from K-State's scientists

This is not the first time Peter Wong, professor of biology, and Yi Li, assistant professor of biology, have sent experiments into space.

Their first experiment went into space in April, but failure of one of the Shuttle's fuel cells forced an early landing after only four days. This time, Columbia's flight STS-94 lasted the full

The payload, a Microgravity Science Laboratory, or MSL, contains dozens of experiments dealing with the behavior of materials in the absence of gravity. The effects of gravity aboard the shuttle are reduced by a factor of nearly 1,000,000 more than what is felt on Earth, according to NASA's MSL web-

► K-State's effect on space. Twelve shuttle missions have contained BioServe experiments. On average, two shuttle flights per year have carried BioServe projects since 1991. They have also placed experiments on board the Russian Space Station Mir. More BioServe experiments will be sent to the Mir Space Station in September for a four-month mission.

Involvement in BioServe program proves K-State's greatness

-State has been a science school since its birth as a land-grant institution in 1863. K-State's infancy involved agriculture, so it is with no surprise we look at K-State today and see scientists whose imaginations, knowledge and research benefit people the world over.

Now, K-State science is past its infancy. Science at K-State could be considered to be in its teen-age years, a time of learning, experiencing and wondering about the world.

K-State is home to BioServe, a NASA Commercial Space Center. BioServe experiments involve abstract complexities such as how plants grow in microgravity. K-State scientists work with University of Colorado scientists to engineer experiments to discover the secrets science holds so well-guarded.

And while each department and every teacher at K-State is important, work being done by programs such as BioServe make K-State science top-of-the-line.

Discoveries made by K-State scientists change the world. These discoveries are not huge ones, not the kind that revolutionize the world, but they are still important discoveries. The work being done here involves those little questions and those little observations that eventually build up into a far more significant discovery.

So what of the middle and old age of science at K-State? Scientists' views of the world will mature with added knowledge. The body of science will go through changes just as we humans change. Science will grow into whatever it is that science will become.

No matter what the future brings, K-State science will not go into our collective future without a light to guide the way. The light science will carry into the future will be the light of knowledge, of hard work and ► ED BOARD

ON ONE HAND, IT'S AN ISSUE OF BEING LURED INTO A SITUATION. ON THE OTHER HAND, IT'S AN ISSUE OF PERSONAL CHOICE AND RESPONSIBILITY. WHO REALLY IS TO BLAME?

DECISIONS

MARY RENEE SMITH is a sopho Mary by e-mail at (mojo@ksu.edu).

omen are whiny, help-less creatures who are lured by men into making bad decisions that ruin their lives. It makes me want to vomit.

"You did not get lured. Women do not get lured - they are too strong and powerful for that. Now say it. I did not get lured. I accept full responsibility for my actions." Susan Sarandon hit the nail right on the head in "Bull Durham." Last week 14-year-old Laura Stimpson ran away from home. She headed out from Kansas City, to California to meet a 16-year-old she had talked to in a chat room on American Online. Her parents and the media blamed the other teenagers in the chat room, AOL and the Internet. This is a smart girl - the television-news reports in Kansas City said she is in the gifted program in her school. She is 14 years old, hardly a naive little girl. Laura Stimpson is smart enough to have a computer in her bedroom, log on to AOL and enter into chat rooms at all hours of the night. She is smart enough to figure out bus schedules and a way to get to the bus station.

Her parents appear to be as dumb as a box of hammers. They let a 14year-old girl have a computer in her bedroom, gave her unlimited hours on AOL and didn't bother to check the bill to know when she was logging on and for how long.

After Laura ran away, her parents had a stroke of genius and logged on AOL using her screen name. They checked out the chat rooms Laura had been visiting and found other teen-agers engaging in pornographic discussion. (Is anyone else not surprised that unsupervised teenagers talk about sex?) The mother gave a tear-jerking interview to a television station in Kansas City Saturday night blaming the Internet and AOL for her daughter's recent behavior.

"It changed her. She would never have done this. She's a good girl." Laura's father said Laura had been lured into running away by the people in the chat rooms.

Wow. I wish I could have run away to California when I was a teen-ager and then blame a worldwide communication medium and a large corporation for my actions. I probably could have. Women are allowed to blame our own stupidity and recklessness on men all of the time. Which explains why women's equality will never fully materialize. How can we expect to be respected, trusted and treated as equals when we do not take personal responsibility for our actions? Laura isn't responsible for her decision to run away from home. Laura's mother isn't responsible for not communicating with her daughter about the Internet or keeping tabs on Laura's

We're not just talking about teenagers taking unauthorized Greyhound tours. According to a recent high-profile Air-Force case, Lt. Kelly Flinn isn't responsible for lying to her superiors, disobeying orders or breaking the military code of justice by having sex with a married man. Lt. Flinn was lured by a

"I truly fell deeply in love with a man who led me down this path of self-destruction and career destruction," she said in a letter to the Air Force Secretary.

Finally, women everywhere had a role model in Lt. Flinn, the first female B-52 bomber pilot. She was the best and brightest of the U.S. fighting forces and a soldier on the front-line fighting for women's quality but, oh, just a pawn in the game of love of an evil man and his jealous

It really does make me sick. Not only is the future of women rights and equality at stake but personal safety is as well. Remember the story of the little boy who cried wolf? What if every woman who makes a bad choice or stupid decision cries "VICTIM"? Who will believe us or care when we really are being victimized.

Equality and freedom starts with a simple statement. Say it with me. "I did not get lured — I accept full responsibility for my actions.'

Church to blame for America's decline in the '90s merica is sliding down the slippery slope towards destruction. We, as a nation, may have passed the proverbial point of no return. We see i all around us. The church — as a whole, not necessarily individually is not the social institution that the Bible calls it to be. The first church was so different than its culture that there was simply no mistaking it (Acts 2:42-47). The church of today is such a part of its culture, it is impossible to tell where one begins and the other ends.

And, the stench of American culture today must burn the nostrils of a most holy God. It has been said what one generation accepts, the next generation approves.

Never has that statement been so true as in American culture today.

KEVIN BAILEY is a senior in elecalled love. In this generation, it is the norm. We don't call it anything - it's just what we do. A generation ago, it became acceptable to kill your child as long as you did it before the baby was born. Today, we debate whether the prom girl's baby actually breathed before she left it in the bathroom.

Who cares?

The baby is dead. Murder is murder.

There are church-going people who not only waffle on the issue, but actually come down on the side of death. Until today's church decides what it actually believes and why, there will be no change in America's downward spiral.

Pastor Todd Weston of First Assembly of God in Manhattan compares today's American culture to a burning house. In a sermon early in spring, he said, "You can't save the house, but you can save the people from the house!"

In other words, we can not save America from the ills that have so permeated our culture. But, we can save the person from those ills.

I could not agree more.

In an age of confusion, our great nation has forgotten where it came from. And, no one can truly say where we are headed. For every humanist that has faith in the good of all mankind, there is a lunatic with a gun that destroys that faith. For every atheist who looks forward to Nietzsche's superman, there is a Hitler or a Stalin to destroy that myth. For every Christian whose faith is not in Christ, but in the Church or self, there are Crusades that defy reason and oblit-

For every religion, every hope that there has ever been, there have been fallacies, myths and evil men that have unceremoniously yanked the proverbial rug of hope from beneath the feet of believers.

America is no different. We have had that rug yanked from under our feet. In fact, it has happened so many times that it has become almost commonplace. In this age, no one is sure what is really true.

I wish I could present a more appealing picture of the state of America, but I cannot. For the truth does not conform to what one wants it to be. And the truth of it is, America is dying

That is not a happy thought. It is not a comforting thought. But, it is true. The moral decline — the rug-pulling — has happened so quickly that most have been sent into a radical state of denial. Conforming to the norm is the craze. It is not normal to believe in absolutes. Therefore, many throw them out the window, with no thought of the logic and reason behind these absolutes.

It is this ignoble display that has hastened the imminent downfall of American culture and civilization.

I would much rather wax eloquent about the future of America, expounding upon its virtues — for there are many. But, the degrading of American virtue far outweighs the astronomical technological advances, lofty world standing and radical medical discoveries that our nation has made. In the end, America will rise and fall on the basis of her virtue. Hearing that is not especially pleasing. But, it has held true throughout empires of ages past, and it will hold true again.

As A.W. Tozer, a respected 20th century theologian and

"For myself, I long ago decided that I would rather know the truth than be happy in ignorance. If I can not have both truth and happiness, give me truth. We will have plenty of time to be happy in heaven.

No, we will not always find temporal happiness in truth. But, as Tozer, I would rather be uncomfortable in the truth than

For longer lasting happiness - eternal joy - can only be found in one place:

The truth.

► READERS WRITE

READER DEFENDS BAILEY'S RIGHT TO EXPRESS OPINIONS

I cannot agree with Andrea Ball's criticism of Kevin Bailey and his editorial (July 14). She contends that his writings belong only in a church pulpit, and he should "mainstream his opinions."

The sole purpose of the editorial page is for the expression of opinions - and not just those which are considered mainstream.

Kevin's column about "coming out of the closet" was about the intolerance that exists concerning religious opinions, and the fear of being shunned for those opinions. Ball shows some of the kind of intolerance he was writing about.

I disagree with many of the editorials in the Collegian. The ones on bicycles, the death penalty, television censorship, etc. I was not insulted because the views of the writers did not conform to my own. Ball evidently believes that only those opinions that everyone agrees with should be printed. Very sad and very wrong.

Heath Schesser left the Cats for the lure of the minor leagues. Now with the Jamestown Jammers, he's any people may think life as a professional baseball player is all fun and games. Heath Schesser, former standout shortstop for the K-State Wildcats, will tell people that it's not always fun, and it requires a lot of games

Schesser was drafted this spring by the Detroit Tigers and was immediately sent to Jamestown, N.Y., to play for the Tigers' short-season A team, the Jamestown Jammers.

"It's a cool town, because the size of it is a lot like Manhattan. There is a junior college, so there are plenty of people our age, but there is not near as much to do here as there was in Manhattan," Schesser said.

But Schesser said the size of the town doesn't matter, because he has little time to get out and have fun.

Every Jammers' game is at 7 p.m., and the players don't leave the stadium until 11 p.m. at the earliest. The next day, they have to be at the field by 1:30 p.m. to get ready for anoth-

'I'm playing in a developmental league, so we're here obviously to develop. We have to be at the park so early because we do early work," Schesser said.

There are roving, hitting and fielding instructors that travel to the minor-league teams to work with them, so every day we go to the ballpark early to work individually with the roving instructors," he said.

When the team is on the road they don't have a lot of time to check out the new cities, because every other day is a mandatory weight day and all players are lifting weights by 10

The Jammers are members of the New York/Penn League, along with teams from New Jersey, Vermont, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and Canada. Schesser said they travel by bus on all road trips and are on the road for up to eight days at a time. "The road trips are all right because we get to travel, but we have to travel by bus. And we only get $15 a day to eat, which really isn't enough," he said.

Schesser said one cool thing about traveling is getting to play in the different ballparks. His first professional game was in Erie, Pa., in a brand new stadium in front of 7,000 fans. Schesser said normal crowds for his games are in the 2,000 to 3,000 range.

All players on the Jammers' team live in the same apartment complex in Jamestown, with four players to each apart-

"One of the best parts of minor-league ball is your teammates. I played against a lot of them in the past, or they knew people I played with, so it's like a tight family where everyone knows everyone," Schesser said.

Schesser said that one of the biggest misconceptions people have about minor-league ballplayers is that they are making a lot of money, but that isn't true. The members of the Jammers make $889 a month, and the rent on their apartment is taken out of their paycheck. One of the biggest differences for Schesser is that he's getting paid to do what he loves. Schesser said the coaches aren't as hard on the players if they lose because they are developing players, and there is a vested interest in how they do because there is

Of the 25 games the Jammers have played since Schesser was drafted, he has seen action in 23 of them.

He said he is struggling a bit defensively, but he is hitting the ball well and continuing to learn. He said the switch to a wooden bat from an aluminum bat wasn't as difficult for him

Ripken streak intact despite back spasms

BALTIMORE - Cal Ripken has been receiving treatment for back spasms this week, although the pain wasn't enough to stop him from starting in his major-league record 2,407th consecutive game Wednesday night.

Ripken skipped batting practice Tuesday and Wednesday while being tended to in the Baltimore Orioles' training room.

Although he was moving gingerly in the clubhouse before Wednesday's game against the Boston Red Sox, Ripken emphatically insisted that his record streak is not in jeopardy.

"It's not severe at all. You walk a little bit different when you have back spasms," he said. "With me, if your vertebrae or whatever else is slightly out of line, it impacts on your muscles and they Ripken's streak began on May 30, 1982, when manager Earl Weaver started him at third base against Toronto at Memorial Stadium. He eclipsed Lou Gehrig's record of 2,130 games on Sept. 6, 1995.

He has had to overcome back spasms throughout the run.

"My whole career, two or three times a year I've had times when my lower back has kind have gone out for whatever reason," he said. "When that happens it starts to spasm a little bit.

'It's pretty normal. You step back a little bit, and you don't want to make it worse than it is. You get treatment and try to relieve the spasms. It's been my experience that they go away, and everything is fine. If you don't get treatment on it and you continue to go out and do things, then you're asking for something more major to happen.'

Ripken was removed in the eighth inning of Tuesday's game against Toronto and replaced at third base by Jeff Reboulet. The Orioles had a sixrun lead at the time

"I came out of the game, from what I understood, because it was 8-2," he said. "It was an opportunity, with the heat and everything else, to

New general manager needed for Royals to compete in NBL

Il right, here it is. I am going to come right out and say it. The Kansas City Royals are horrible

If I offended you, too bad. I don't care. I realize the Royals are in a tough division with Cleveland and Chicago, but after ly, I find no difficulty in stating that they are horrible.

It is not the players that are horrible, nor is it the new manager, Tony Muser. Former Manager Bob Boone was a good manager, too. The real problem is Royals' general manager Herk Robinson.

Herk Robinson and the Royals staff scouting need replaced.

There are several reasons for this. The Royals are a small-market team. They can't afford to go out and get expensive free agents such as Albert Belle, who makes more than the entire Pittsburgh Pirates team. Therefore, the Royals need to work on developing a strong minor-league system.

The Montreal Expos are a prime example of a small-market team that has regularly done this by developing players such as Larry Walker and Marquis Grisson. Although they weren't able to keep these players once they reached star status, they have been able to produce good players.

The point is it is possible to build a good team without spending more than the national debt to do so.

The Royals need to do a better job of scouting their talent they have in their minor league system. I remember in 1992 when all the teams in major league baseball were getting ready for the expansion draft, and the Colorado Rockies and Florida Marlins were getting ready to start play.

The Royals had a prospect named Jeff Conine in their system. They also had Bob Hamelin, whom they chose to protect. However, they let the Marlins pick up Conine in the first round of the draft.

At the time, I remember telling my dad how stupid it was to protect Hamelin. When Hamelin had that good rookie season, I thought I could have possibly been wrong. But as it turned out, Conine was the 1995 All-Star game MV, and is still a quality major-league player, while Hamelin was finally released by the Royals this

There are always going to be teams trading away prospects organizations. But when are the Royals going to be the team to get that star prospect from another team? Now, the Royals have a new manager. Bob Boone was fired July 9. Last November, the Royals had extended his contract through the 1999 season.

The Kansas City Star reported that Boone may have threatened to give Royals' Chairman of the Board David Glass an ultimatum choose between him or Herk SPÜRGIN Robinson. Club President Mike MATT SPURGIN is a senior Herman said the club was going to back Robinson, but the whole organization was going to be reevaluated at the end of the sea-

The real problem with the Royals is the front office, namely the general manager. The general manager is supposed to deal with the trades and acquisitions of players, and Herk Robinson has not done his job. Part of the reason Boone might have been upset was Robinson's failure to find him a quality relief pitcher after searching for longer than a

Several years ago, the Royals were a decent team. John Schuerholz was the general manager, but then he left to become the general manager of the Atlanta Braves. And look at their team now. They have won their division every year since 1991, excluding the strike-shortened 1994 season. Sure, the Braves have Ted Turner's money to spend to keep the roster they have. But the Royals could develop a quality team from prospects, minor-league-player deals and the annual amateur draft. First, however, they should develop a better front office and

Japanese-sensation pitcher Irabu half-American

TOKYO — Japan-born pitcher Hideki Irabu had long kept one secret to himself: His biological father was an American.

In a country where mixed parentage is still a social stigma, Irabu had little to gain from acknowledging his past.

Although Irabu's half-American background was rumored among Japanese baseball aficionados practically since his debut, fans and local media had politely steered clear of the topic, treating him as just another sports hero.

Irabu's 51-year-old stepfather, Ichiro Irabu, who raised the pitcher as his own son, was reluctant to talk about that part of Irabu's past. But he said in a telephone interview that Irabu's dad was an

"I don't want to talk about what's private. Please forgive me," he said Wednesday from the restaurant he runs in Osaka, 250 miles west of Tokyo. "I don't want to answer, but it is true."

After The New York Times ran a story in Tuesday's editions about Irabu's background, the Japanese sports tabloids followed with a story that had been taboo for

The Daily Sports reported today that the 28-year-old Irabu had told some Japanese reporters he wanted to pitch for the New York Yankees because he wants to find his biological father.

"Even if he can't meet his father, he believes his father will see him if he does well in the United States," the Daily Sports reported, quoting unidentified officials with Irabu's former club, the Lotte

Both the Lotte Marines and the Pacific League of Japanese professional baseball declined comment on the reports about Irabu's father.

Issues of racial background are very sensitive in Japan, which is largely homogeneous. People of mixed racial background often face social ostracism as children and discrimination in finding jobs and marriage partners later in life. But some of Japan's most loved baseball heroes are not Japanese. The Chinese Sadaharu Oh, who hit more home runs than any other player, now manages the Fukuoka Daiei Hawks. Sachio Kinugasa, second only to Cal

Ripken as the ironman of baseball, playing in 2,215 consecutive games from 1970-87, is the son of an American serviceman and a Japanese woman. Some players suffered abuse similar to what Jackie Robinson went through when he broke U.S. baseball's color barrier with the Brooklyn Dodgers in 1947. Slugger Isao Harimoto, who is of Korean ancestry, endured ugly jeers from opposing team fans as late as the 1970s.

By refusing to be ashamed of his ancestry, Harimoto became a hero in Japan's Korean community. Images of his mother sitting in the stands in traditional Korean dress have become legendary.

More often, as in the case of Irabu, it was the silence that was telling. Instead of being a source of pride, mixed parentage tended to be viewed as a blight to be for-

"If a player is great, no one is going to dig up the past," said Masaru Ikei, a Keio University professor and baseball expert. "In the United States, even if skin color or language is different, it's a place where the American dream is possible, as long as you have talent and luck."

Irabu's heritage was certain to be more acceptable in the United States, where "there are more immigrants, divorce is by far more common and parents are frequently of different nationalities," the Sports Nippon said in a front-page story. After all, Tiger Woods is proud that his mother is Thai, it said.

"But this is an extremely sensitive topic for Irabu," the story said. "It is certain to serve as an initiation rite for his survival in the Yankees."

In New York, a Yankees spokesman

Summer can be a time for fun in the sun and a time for students to get involved at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Many students and faculty find aerobics classes that fit their interests at the Recreation Complex. There are many classes offered to suit each person's ability and intensity-levels. Also, along with the workout, there is a warm-up and cool-down period to prevent "I am impressed with all the options of workouts offered by the Recreation Complex. It really gives you a lot of choices," LaRona Nichols, senior in apparel and textile marketing, said. Basic aerobics, which combines highand low-impact aerobics, is offered at noon on Tuesdays and Thursdays. The step classes start at 6:30 a.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays and at noon

Monday, Wednesday and Friday. Step classes build strength and endurance using sixinch, eight-inch or 10-inch risers. A combination class is offered at 6:30

Two exercises are alternated each day. The three options for each workout, chosen by the instructor, are aerobics, stepping and toning. Toning is strength-training using involved. "It is a majority of women who take the classes, but we are seeing more men. Although, they tend to like the step classes more than the others," Robin Quinn, assis-

Poetry-reading forum gets residents' writings in front of peers

STANDING AT the podium, a poet reads his work before a small audience at The Dusty Bookshelf,

STORY BY APRYL MATHES PHOTOS BY IVAN KOZAR

Poetry is the flushpot of the '90s.

At least, that's what a co-worker of Jeff Chan told him.

However, Chan, who coordinated the first public poetry reading of the summer, thinks of poetry as anything but wasted time.

And the twenty-some people who turned out at the Dusty Bookshelf Sunday evening would probably agree.

Chan said this was the first poetry reading he has organized.

"I'm just sort of doing this on my own, with the English Department's blessing," Chan said.

"Or curse, as the case may be." Chan said the English Department at K-State usually sponsors such events approximately five times a year. Anyone is welcome to take the stage, he said, and anything goes.

"We just go off the cuff," Chan said, "It's pretty much an open forum."

However, even the inviting atmosphere of the Dusty Bookshelf doesn't prompt Chan to read any of his own work

"I just write fiction," he said. "And bad

Diane Meredith, owner of the Dusty Bookshelf, said she feels the same way.

"I love books, and I love reading, but I don't claim to be a writer," Meredith said.

Playing host to poetry readings has been a delight, she said. The bookstore has been home to the event since it relocated to Aggieville in

"It's a real treat to have people in," Meredith said. "And you never know what to expect."

They have had a couple of real entertainers in the past, she said. Jamie McAtee, Topeka resident, said the fact her boyfriend was reading was one incentive to come. She said another reason was the

"Everyone is so accepting," she said. "I just like everyone's viewpoints.'

This was the first poetry reading for Eldon Epp, pastor of Manhattan Mennonite Church. 'We loaned them the chairs," he said.

"That's how I learned about it." Epp said he was looking forward to a fun

"I thought if I get to hear some good stuff and meet some fascinating people, then it's worth it," he said. Reading some of that good stuff was Corey Lewis, graduate student in english. He said it was a great experience to stand in front of crowd to share his work. "It's been good for my own growth and enjoyment," he said.

One of the most important aspects of writing,

Lewis said, is the effect of what you create. "I think seeing the reaction from the audience is important," Lewis said. "After all, when you write, you're trying to affect someone.'

Lewis said he has received helpful advice from listeners. "Sometimes we've had group readings where we critique and offer suggestions," he Overall, Lewis said reading poetry is an enjoyable experience.

"It's a good experience to learn from," he

Video stores offer options for summer movie viewing

Local business owners said there is no shortage of people renting movies from the local video stores during summer months.

"In the summer, it seems like all the residents of Manhattan come out of the woodwork and rent movies," Courtney Worthington, video associate at Hastings Book, Music & Video, said. "Maybe it's because the students are gone."

Chiquita Miller, customer service representative at Blockbuster Video, disagreed.

"In the summer, there are way too many things to do outdoors," Miller said. "Unless the weather is bad, that is.'

Both agreed the weekends are the busiest time year round.

"Saturday is the busiest time of year," Worthington said. "Friday nights, it's parents renting for their kids, and Saturday nights, it's the younger crowd."

Miller said she felt that Friday night was Blockbuster's busiest night because customers can keep the movies all weekend.

"We're busiest from 5 p.m. to 10 p.m. on Friday nights, usually right when people are just getting off work or just getting out of a movie," Miller said. "Some people use our phone and order pizza, then rent their movie and go home in time to have the pizza delivered.

Clerks at Video Express said winter is their busiest time of year, probably because the college students are in town.

"Our busiest night is a toss-up between Friday and Saturday nights, Troy Smith, video clerk at Video Express, said. "We're busy through the whole school year.'

Kris Strutt, owner of Prime Time Video, agreed that weekends were the busiest, but said that the number of rentals stayed

'We stay pretty busy because we run specials all the time," Strutt said. "For the summer you can get five movies for five days for $5. We also let families come in and pick out one free kid's movie every day from our children's section. It's our way of helping out families who have children home all day now that school's out."

Blockbuster has what it calls "Clockbuster," which gives video renters $1 back for each new release they return before 7 p.m.

No matter where a person goes to rent a movie, all new releases come out on Tuesdays.

"We can get a huge fine if we break the street date," Worthington said. "We've started staying open until 12:30 a.m. on Monday nights so people can come in and rent a new release at 12:01-which makes it officially Tuesday."

Jiffy Boy brings energy to stage of Last Chance

SERAPHINE NAEYMI

A rowdy group formed in front of the small stage at Last Chance Resturant & Saloon on Tuesday night to watch Jiffy Boy perform. Under most circumstances, I am not a punk fan, and this really did not change those feelings, but Jiffy Boy has a contagious energy that almost any red-blooded college student can appreciate.

The band consists of Chris Balsinger on vocals, Marc Johnson and Jeremy Sturgell on guitar, Scott Griffin on bass and Jed Eropkin on drums. The band has been together for a year and a half. Johnson and Sturgell joined Jiffy Boy five months ago. The band members have had no musical training, except for Balsinger, who has taken vocal classes at K-State. "I never learned how to play an instrument because I'm lazy, impatient and uncoordinated. I want to concentrate on my singing," Balsinger said. All of the band members collaborate on the music, and Balsinger writes most of the lyrics. The band has no label for their music. We have played more popular music lately. We have a lot of different influences on our music," Balsinger said. Propaghandi, the Bubble Boys, Swinging Utters and Fluorescent Condoms are a few of the influential groups the band mentioned. "We stay away from anything that sounds like the Dead," Eropkin said.

Band members have written a number of songs about their friend James, who they refer to as their sixth member. "The song 'Supermarket Love' is about when James stalked this girl at Dillons," Balsinger said.

The inspiration is endless where James is concerned - he is also the inspiration for their new song "Arghh-lyss."

The band is a huge ball of explosive energy on stage. Balsinger thrashed around stage while singing speed lyrics at the top of his hormonal-Johnson, Griffin and Sturgell whipped heads and bodies in time with music while still successfully playing the songs. Eropkin kept the energy going while pounding his drums with Sex Pistols flare. I have to admit I was overwhelmed by Jiffy Boy's performance. The band's energy is larger than life, which makes them harder to take seriously as musicians. The first thing you notice about Jiffy Boy is its energy, then you notice the music. The band cannot rely on energy alone because energy has the potential to die out.

Jiffy Boy will be recording a seven-inch record August 15-17. The group has plans to tour Missouri, Colorado, Oklahoma and Kansas the rest of the summer.

Professor garners award for national ag-journal writings

An associate professor of agricultural economics was awarded in June for journal articles

Andrew Barkley was given the E.B. Knight Journal Award at the 1997 National Association of Colleges and Teachers of Agriculture conference in Ames. Iowa.

The award is given to individuals who write articles in the NACTA Journal, a professional journal serving college teachers in agricultural, environmental, natural and life sciences.

Recipients of the award are selected by a committee of agricultural professionals who evaluate the articles published in the 1996 edition of the journal.

Criterian used in the evaluation of the articles include composition, documentation, format, new ideas and interest to the journal's readers.

Barkley's award is well-merited by his dedication to his students and the department, Daniel Bernardo, agricultural economics department head, said.

"He'll do just about everything for the students," Bernardo said.

Barkley teaches three courses in agricultural economics, including entry-level, senior-level and doctoral courses

Barkley teaches Agricultural Economics and Agribusiness every spring semester for 150 to 200 students, Bernardo said. Barkley gives weekly writing assignments and grades them all himself, giving individual feedback to his students.

Current Agricultural and Natural Resource Policy Issues is a senior-level course that allows students to discuss and debate current agricultural issues, using the skills and tools they have learned in previous courses, Bernardo said.

Research Methods in Economics is the doctoral-level class Barkley teaches. This class is the most difficult graduate classe in the department to teach, Bernardo said.

"The more difficult the teaching challenge, the more willing he is to take on the course," Bernardo said.

Barkley's colleagues agree.

"He's a very demanding instructor," Arlo Biere, professor in agricultural economics, said. "As long as students are willing to work, he's willing to give."

Barkley uses one-on-one and small-group methods to get acquainted with students and to facilitate learning, Biere said.

examples. He said Barkley brings economics to life in his teaching by using current events and practical examples on real situations.

Seeking ways to better his teaching methods and classes is another strength of Barkley's,

"He also leads by example," he said. "I've learned a lot in the terms of new ideas.' Former students from Barkley's classes recommend his courses to other students "He really made you think," Rousseau, senior in agribusiness, said.

Rousseau took Agricultural Economics and Agribusiness from Barkley in 1995. She said Barkley kept students' attention by using examples.

"I learned so much," she said. Barkley made arrangements outside of class time to help students who needed it, Rousseau said. Rousseau said she didn't like economics, but really liked his class. She even asked him for advice on obtaining an agribusiness degree although she wasn't an agribusiness major or a student he was advising.

"He's a riot. He really is," she said. Barkley was out of town and unavailable for Construction on Farrell Library has become a normal sight on cam-

However, the days of a chain-link fence separating students and construction workers are over, and with construction nearly complete, people can begin to see the end product of the lengthy construction.

Construction is scheduled to be finished by the end of August, Ed Heptic, project coordinator, said. The final cost will be about $29 million, which was raised through grants, students fees and private money, he said. Heptic said the plans were to finish construction by the time students return for the fall semester. The interior work has been finished since April, and pouring concrete for the sidewalks is the next step towards completion. "As soon as the concrete is down, then we'll close Mid Campus Drive to all traffic," Jerry Carter, Director of Facilities Planning and University Architect, said.

The only traffic that will be allowed on Mid Campus Drive is that of the construction workers so concrete can be poured efficiently, Carter Repaving Mid Campus Drive is just one part of the overall construction contract for the library.

Next, the irrigation system will be put in. The plant material will be placed soon after that, Carter said.

Farrell is not only changing its exterior and interior. A dedication ceremony will rename the building to Hale Library on Oct. 5, Jan Crow, marketing and public relations director of the library, said.

Crow said the original 1927 structure facing Waters Hall will still be considered Farrell. Every other part of the library will be Hale.

Proper food handling can prevent bacteria from turning into cases of food poisoning

NAKIA Y. WALLER

Careless food handling can result in food poisoning that is generally characterized by the symptoms of nausea, vomiting and loss of appetite.

James Urban, assistant in the microbiology department at K-State, said staphylococcus is a common form of bacteria that causes food poisoning.

"Staph is a common bacteria found in and on the body in a large percentage of the population," he said.

Games resume amid accusations

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — The Maccabiah Games resumed today amid accusations that a bridge that collapsed during the competition's opening ceremony was built by a contractor who was not licensed to do the work.

Two Australian athletes were killed when the 65-foot-long span buckled Monday, throwing dozens of people into the Yarkon River. In all 64 people were injured, and seven remained in serious condition today.

The engineer who approved the bridge, Micha Bar-Illan, was under house arrest after being questioned by police Tuesday, Israel radio reported today. Police refused to comment on the report.

The contractor, Ben-Ezra Kargula, was to be questioned today, the radio

The bridge, a temporary span into the Ramat Gan stadium constructed for the games, did not have the required permits and was anchored to the ground only with metal wire, newspaper reports said.

Yoav Sarni, chairman of the Engineers Association, said the bridge's engineering was miserable.

"They simply laid the metal bridge on the ground as if it was a stage prop and not a bridge that would have to bear pedestrians," he told Israel radio.

Sarni said the contractor hired to build the bridge was not listed as a licensed bridge builder. He blamed the organizers of the Maccabiah Games for failing to hire supervisors.

"If there had been supervision, the supervisor would have warned that the job had been given to a contractor who does not have a permit to do it," Sarni

Bar-Illan, the engineer who approved the bridge, told Israel TV the span had been built to hold no more than 100 people.

"I insisted, and the client agreed, that a man would be posted at the entrance to the bridge and would not allow more than 100 people onto it at any one time," he told Israel TV.

Public Security Minister Avigdor Kahalani said he did not know of any such restriction.

Video shot just before the collapse showed the Australian athletes coming onto the bridge en masse, and no one was visible counting them. Israel TV said nearly all of the 380 members Australian team were on the bridge when it fell. However, eyewitnesses put the number at about 100.

The Israeli army corps of engineers reportedly had offered to build the bridge for $85,700, but lost out to a private company that bid $20,000 for the

The games were called off for 24 hours to mourn the dead and injured athletes. They resumed this morning.

Ichiro Irabu, too, wanted to talk more about his pride of seeing Hideki Irabu pitching in the majors than about his

"I told him he should make up his own mind. He said he wanted to give it a try over there," he said, recalling a conversation earlier this year. "He can't understand the language, so there must be so much pressure. I just worry about his health."

Wong's experiment, two years in planning, deals with plants and how they react with microgravity. He sent two plants - wheat and clover.

The goal of the experiment is to get the wheat to form nodules that can convert nitrogen from the air for self-fertilization. The plants were to grow in an agar-base support instead of soil and are mixed with Rhizobium, a beneficial micro-organism that helps plants grow root nodules.

Li's experiment deals with genes. He will examine how the concentration and distribution of auxin, a plant hormone, are altered with plants under micrograv-

The plants for these experiments were flown to NASA by Jerry Johnson, BioServe's project engineer June 27 and loaded onto the middeck of the space shuttle. Johnson and Qi Li, a Bioserve lab assistant, are at Kennedy Space Center, where they will retrieve the plants and perform some experiment results there.

"NASA has a very finite procedure," Rachel Graham, Bioserve's marketing and program development manager, said. "Generally, they want to wait 24 hours before they can get the experiments off the shuttle."

Both Wong and Li's experiments should provide benefits to applications on Earth as well as in future space explo-

"Congress wants to know when the space program can be self-supportive," Wong said. "They are spending lots of money and want to know how we can use space for commercial purposes."

Wong, who has been at K-State since 1976, said the current experiment had to be astronaut friendly.

"You want to make everything as automatic as possible," he said. Wong said he wanted the plants to grow and wanted to measure their color. The University of Colorado, which planned to monitor the plant growth by watching it on live video, ran into a snag. Graham said the lens clouded up.

The flight, with a seven-member crew, is the 85th shuttle mission. It will bring back answers to numerous questions about how life reacts in space. Graham said Mars is a three-year round

Catholics, Protestants pray IRA cease-fire will remain forever

BELFAST, Northern Ireland -On one side of the 30-foot-high fences that separate Catholics from Protestants in west Belfast, the Ferris family arrived for Mass as the clock struck noon Sunday - and gave thanks for the peace that the new Irish Republican Army cease-fire heralds.

"It's brilliant. It's for the young generation that this cease-fire will work," said Eamonn Ferris, gesturing to his son Chris, celebrating his second birthday with a new toy.

"We've all got a present today," said his wife Theresa as they entered Clonard Monastery. There, worshipers prayed for the 3,400 people killed in the past 28 years of bombings, shootings and riots over who should control Northern Ireland.

Just a few hundred yards away, on the other side of the fences, Protestant worshipers leaving the Free Kirk Presbyterian church were more skeptical that the IRA's openended gesture - in effect as of noon Sunday - would last.

"We'd like the cease-fire to work, but those boys went back on their word once before, so they could easnessman Tom Stewart, 61. "It's not an unconditional cease-fire. We have to give them what they want."

A sign outside the church proclaimed, "Let us follow the things that make for peace."

The local newsstand briskly sold copies of newspaper from the Irish Republic whose banner headlines claimed the IRA might end its truce in November if Protestant politicians refused to compromise.

The last IRA truce of Sept. 1, 1994 collapsed after 17 months because Protestant leaders refused to meet the IRA-allied Sinn Fein party for negotiations. They demanded that the IRA start disarming first, a condition rejected by the Sinn Fein-IRA

And before the IRA had even officially laid down its weapons again Sunday, Protestant politicians were laying down the same unlikely hurdle for Sinn Fein to clear in negotiations on Northern Ireland's future.

"I personally could not take part in talks with Sinn Fein with a gun to my head," said John Taylor, deputy leader of the largest Protestant party, the Ulster Unionists.

New parking signs will greet students as they head back to campus this fall. K-State Parking Services has redesigned the signs and permits that let people know where they can park.

Peggy Winkler, accounting specialist for public safety, said they have been working to improve signs and lot designations to make them easier to understand

"There will be three ways to determine where to park - signs, permit and whatever is marked on the pavement," Winkler said.

Kansas meat inspectors and processors met at K-State July 19 to learn new techniques to produce safe meat products.

Participants attended the training session titled "E. coli Carcass Sampling Procedures and Techniques Training Workshop." The workshop was about sampling procedures and techniques for generic E. coli to comply with the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Food Safety and Inspection Service.

E. coli, or Escherichia coli, is a bacterial species found in human and animal intestines. One strain of E. coli, E. coli O157:H7, can cause Hemorrhagic colitis.

Symptoms include severe cramping and diarrhea that is initially watery but later bloody. Vomiting can occur accompanied with a low-grade fever. The illness lasts an average of eight days.

E. coli was chosen by the USDA Food Safety and Inspection Service to be tested as an indicator of fecal contamination of animal carcasses, Randall Phebus, associate professor of food microbiology in the department of animal science and industry, said.

'So that is why we're testing for E. coli, it's an indicator of process control," he said.

The goal of process control is to avoid bacterial contamination by potentially dangerous bacteria like E. coli O157:H7, Phebus said.

"I feel it's an outstanding thing for K-State to do," Kelly Karr, graduate student in food science, said.

Meat processors need assistance learning about the sampling if they do not have someone in their facility that has microbiology experience. Karr said having processors and state inspectors work together helps them understand

Boyle said training for inspectors and processors is usually separated. This workshop encouraged the two groups working together.

"It's a unique opportunity because we will be training inspectors and processors at the same tan furball with a dark nose sleeps inside a wood box oblivious to the rest of the world. Born June 29, a four-ounce baby red panda is the 10th baby panda born at Manhattan's Sunset Zoological Park. It is even more special because pandas don't breed easily. Female pandas are only receptive to mating once a year and then for just 18-24 hours. Only 24 red pandas were born last year in North American accredited "Consistently, we are one of the most successful zoos," Ryan Gulker, zoo curator, said about panda reproduc-

Gulker attributes the pandas' breeding success to three things - a nice exhibit, keepers who provide good care and a compatible pair of pandas.

The baby's parents, Chris and Nick, have been very successful at mating. They have had cubs every year since 1992 - two males, three females and the newest one, of which the sex has not been determined yet.

Adult pandas, which have ringed tails and patches under their eyes, live an average lifespan of 14 years and are on the endangered-species list.

On loan from the National Zoo in Washington, D.C., Chris, the mother, was born in 1991 in Roanoke, Va. Nick, the father, was born in 1990 at the Omaha, Neb., 200.

Other than breeding once a year, they tend to ignore each other the remainder of the time. Red pandas mate from mid-January to early March and have their young from mid-June to late July.

The new cub will get a red tint in its coat in August and is expected to come out of the nesting den as early as October.

Two other offspring, which live off-exhibit, will go to another zoo in a few months. The cub will transfer to another zoo in approximately one year.

Animals such as pandas are not allowed to breed at random. The Sunset Zoo subscribes to the Species Survival Plan, which is coordinated at the National Zoo. A SSP coordinator for pandas regulates breeding of pandas at all zoos accredited by the

DNA exam: Kleypas' blood samples match those found at murder scene

KANSAS CITY, Kan. - An FBI expert testified Friday that DNA samples of semen and blood found in the apartment of a slain Pittsburg State University student matched that of Gary Kleypas, who is accused in the student's death.

Semen and blood samples were found on a blanket in the apartment of Carrie Williams, and a blood sample was taken from the sock that allegedly was used to bind her to a chair, Thomas Callaghan, the FBI expert, said.

Callaghan said the samples matched the DNA of Kleypas, who could be the first to get the death penalty since it was reinstituted in Kleypas, 41, is charged with capital murder, rape, sodomy, robbery and burglary in the March 30, 1996 stabbing death of the 20year-old Williams.

2 K-State Basketball players enter pleas of innocent to misdemeanor charges

Two K-State basketball players charged with misdemeanors in the alleged attack on a Collegian columnist entered pleas of innocent in a Riley County Courthouse on Friday.

Manny Dies and Pero Vasiljevic did not appear in court, but attorneys for the two entered innocent pleas on behalf of the defendants. Since both parties pleaded innocent, the case is scheduled to go to trial on July 28 at 9 a.m. If found guilty, the charges carry penalties of up to six months in jail and fines up to $1,000. Dies was reportedly out of the state during the trial, and Vasiljevic was out of the country. The judge allowed the proceedings to continue without the defendants present.

The charges of one count of assault, one count of criminal damage to property and one count of criminal trespass are filed against Dies. Vasiljevic has one count of assault and one count of criminal trespass filed against him.

1-70 exit to Fort Riley closed, undergoes repairs

East-bound Interstate 70 travelers going toward Fort Riley will have to detour. Exit 301 to Fort Riley is undergoing repairs. The detour will be to exit at Grandview Plaza and take Frontage Road to access the post.

Work on the interchange began on July 14, and is expected to be completed around Labor

"We are putting up new bridge rails on the whole bridge, and repairing the approaches and ramps," Bob Blackmore, project manager for the Kansas Department of Transportation, said.

Construction and repair work is planned for eight miles of 1-70 east of Junction City. These repairs will include the pavement and ramps of four exits including exit 303 for Kansas Highway 18, as well as the interstate.

The bridge closing over 1-70 by the Marshall Air Field did not come as a surprise to Fort Riley.

"We knew this was going to happen last winter, and got the warning earlier this month in a preconstruction meeting," Roger Williams, civil engineer with Fort Riley's Public Works, said. "Outside of being inconvenient, this hasn't created any problems."

7 arrested in conspiracy to smuggle deaf Mexicans

NEW YORK - Seven people were arrested today after scores of deaf Mexicans were kept in slave-like conditions and forced to peddle trinkets for the smugglers who had brought them here, authorities said.

Police found 62 Mexicans, many of them mute and 10 of them children, crammed into two Queens apartments divided into cubicles, Mayor Rudolph Giuliani said Saturday. The children ranged in age from 4 months to 7

The Mexicans lived in squalor while working long hours for low wages, selling trinkets on subways and at airports, threatened with deportation by the people who brought them to the United States.

Four of those arrested today were charged federally with conspiracy to smuggle aliens.

The adults - 30 women and 22 men - also may have been physically and sexually abused. Police were alerted to their plight when four deaf and mute Mexican men showed up at the Queens station house at about 4 a.m. Saturday, Giuliani said.

6 die when planes collide over Lake Michigan

CHICAGO - Two small planes collided over Lake Michigan on late Saturday afternoon, smashing into the water within sight of revelers on Chicago's beaches and killing six people on board.

Rescue workers called off the search for more bodies or survivors after six bodies were pulled from the lake.

Witnesses said one plane lost a wing in the collision, burst into flames and plunged into the water about 60 yards off shore.

The other plane continued flying northward for a half mile before it dropped into the lake about seven miles south of the Loop business

Fire threatens New Jersey retirement communities

BERKELEY TOWNSHIP, N.J. - A central New Jersey wildfire that burned about 800 acres Saturday forced the evacuation of 2,000 residents of two retirement communities.

Fire officials describe the area as an urbanwoodland interface, where forest lands meet suburban development.

No injuries to residents had been reported, but one firefighter was treated at the scene for minor burns.

Barresi said the only known damage to property was a garden shed, lawn furniture, a garden hose and melted siding on several homes.

The blaze was reported at 1:17 p.m., and crews hoped to have it contained around mid-

Fifteen fire engines and nearly 50 firefighters were battling the blaze.

Summer Workshops

Flint Hills Journalism Publications Workshop continues 16-year tradition of education

High-school sophomores and juniors from 61 schools and eight states gathered in Manhattan Sunday for the week-long Flint Hills Publications

The workshop was established 16 years ago and still remains the largest workshop of its kind in the state. During those 16 years, the workshop has undergone some changes

"We expanded with many more sections," Linda Puntney, executive director of the Journalism Education Association, said.

Sections include areas like advising, editorial leadership, advanced computer redesign, desktop publishing, photography, maestro, newspaper writing/design, yearbook writing/design, yearbook production, video production and Diversity Discovery.

The 197 students from 13 states will divide into these areas and will be presented with detailed infor-

"We want to give them instructions that they can go home and use," Ron Johnson, director of Student Publications, said

The Diversity Discovery program selects students in middle school who have a multicultural backgrounds to participate in learning the same way highschool students are, Puntney said

Faculty and K-State students will team up to help the students learn a variety of information from their section. K-State students are helping the faculty by serving as counselors for the students, Puntney said.

Student participants will hear guest speakers from around the country throughout the week. Four of those speakers are Dow Jones Teacher-of-the-Year award

Jackie Harmon, workshop registration coordinator, said having the workshop at K-State is beneficial for

"They get a feel of what college life is like. It's their first time being away from mom and dad for a whole week," she said.

Some students are going to work with newspapers, while others will work with materials for yearbooks.

"The projects that they'll be doing deal with writing techniques, deadlines, story ideas, editing," Puntney said. "And the yearbook people will come up with different themes."

All of the sections produce some kind of material that can be reviewed. By the end of the week, participants should haveproduced their own newspaper called the "Kedzie Krier," and the yearbook staff members should have information and photographs taken throughout their week at K-State.

Dairy specialist helps producers meet goals

Although he had experience in crop. swine and beef production, John Smith chose a career in the dairy industry. "What attracted me to the dairy industry is the ability to collect data on individual animals," Smith, an extension dairy specialist at K-State, said.

For two years Smith has been one of two extension dairy specialists. He works with individual producers and helps them with technical, reproduction and expansion problems or concerns.

Smith also said he enjoys the opportunity to implement management strategies in dairy operations.

He helps producers meet their goals and organizes educational meetings and conferences during the year. He also speaks at these conferences.

Smith is one of three co-chairmen for the Western Dairy Management Conference, which takes place every other year in Las Vegas.

"One of my claims to fame is putting on the dairy management conference," he said.

At the initial conference in 1993, only 100 people attended. The conference has become so popular that the 1997 attendance was 1,800 and featured extension specialists from 12 states.

Smith also said he helps with the dairy-expansion conference in northeast Kansas for producers who are interesting in expanding their operation.

related issues daily, he does not own cat-

"I grew up in Iowa in town. I was one of those lucky town kids who got to work on farm operations," Smith said. Smith said he has a supportive family. He has a wife and a six-year-old daughter. "They take care of everything at home so dad can travel. I do a lot of traveling, and I don't like being away from my family," Smith said. When he finds free time, Smith said he enjoys being outdoors, hunting, fishing and boating with his family. Smith pursued his bachelor's and master's degree at Northwest Missouri State University where he met his wife. He earned his doctorate at the University of Missouri. In 1989, Smith traveled to New Mexico State University as an extension dairy specialist.

"It was a really good experience for me. When I got there, there were 100 dairies with 82,000 cows, and when I left there were 150 dairies with 180,000 cows," Smith said.

Smith said he enjoys working with Kansas dairy producers because of the number of large and expanding dairies. "There are a large number of smaller producers in Kansas also looking at expanding their dairies. It's fun to work with both groups," Smith said.

Business Week creates opportunities for students to learn about management and entrepreneurial skills

AARON BRUNGARDT

High-school juniors will be on campus this week for the third-annual Business Week. The program, which started Sunday and will last until Saturday, is sponsored by the K-State Business Department and will teach high-school students about ethics, how to operate a business and how to work with others.

'This is going to be an intense, educational experience," Burke said. During the program, the 72 students will break up into seven different companies, Richard Burke, Executive Director of Business Week, said. Each company will compete against one another throughout the week. Every company will have an adult adviser. A K-State business honor student will also serve as a counselor for every company as well. Sarah Perry, senior in accounting, said it is beneficial to the counselors.

"This is as much of a learning experience for me as it will be for the stu-management information systems, said. She said company advisers are fresh out of college and are able to give the students an idea of what to expect when they search the job market after college graduation. "This also helps students get an idea of what to major in when they go to college," she said. Business leaders from all areas of Kansas will also be speaking to the students during the week. "The students are going to be able to hear the finest entrepreneurs from all over the state," he said. Colantone, Manhattan Chamber of Commerce president, is one of the many people speaking at the Business Week.

he City of Manhattan has made some progress on improving the condition of local streets.

With so many construction projects underway, the streets we drive on will be more pleasant to use someday.

However, unless the city wants complete chaos when students come back to school in the fall, it needs to finish what it started and complete the construction.

Now, city streets are littered with orange cones and void of street lines. If these jobs aren't finished by the time students move back to town in a few weeks, needless accidents and traffic jams will be far more likely.

Driving on Bluemont Avenue - without marked street lanes - with several thousand more people in town will be far worse than escaping the parking lot at Arrowhead after a Kansas City Chiefs game.

Right now, we can manage. Sure, the lack of street lines on Bluemont Avenue leaves us unable to distinguish between the right and wrong side

But at least there are fewer people in town so it can't hurt anybody.

Upon the arrival of Aug. 1, when new apartment leases begin, several thousand students will move into Manhattan, and wrecks will occur if these projects aren't done.

Can drivers count on the city? Maybe not. They've had all summer to get the job done, and apparently, the construction may never be fin-

All drivers can do is be careful and avoid dangerous situations.

On the way into town, watch out on Kansas Highway 177. The seemingly never-ending process of putting two lanes on the road is still disrupting drivers.

Be careful, because when K-177 bottlenecks from two lanes down to one, the northbound lane takes a sharp turn to the left - into the construction zone - and inattentive drivers could be at risk for head-on collisions.

Drivers should be careful on Interstate 70 exit 313, one of the main turnoffs into Manhattan. There is still construction on this ramp.

Moving day means hassle, extra effort t is about that time. The fall semester is nearing, August leases are ending and/or beginning and that means one thing - time to move. Students and other people will be moving from one to to a different apartment in Manhattan, or moving into an apartment for the first time.

And for all of you, especially you first-time movers, I feel sorry for you. I think moving is sometimes more trouble than it is worth.

I, too, will soon be moving. It's just to the other side of the pool at my apartment complex, but I am already realizing what a pain in the rump it is to move.

When I first moved into the dorms at college, I realized what a pain it was to drag all my crap up six flights of stairs. since those wonderful modern Marlatt Hall elevators decided not to work that day. Through the course of that semester, I was impressed by the amount of stuff I accumulated when I decided to change dorm rooms and move down the hall. I had just accumulated stuff over the semester.

Then when it came time to move out I had accumulated more stuff than would have even fit in my car. Luckily, my dad came in the van to get all of my stuff.

your e-mail comments to Matt at mathpu@ksu.edu Then when I moved into my apartment, I had to once again load a whole pile of possessions into my car and my parent's van and make the trip to Manhattan. I vaguely remember telling myself that moving was no fun, and I didn't want to do it again. Since that move, the number of possessions in my apartment has increased. I've gotten more compact discs, more books and more clothes, and now I will have to move all of it again. Somehow when signing that new lease six months ago,

I forgot what a pain it is to move, and now that I am getting ready to do it again I am regretting it. I realized even more what a pain it is to move last week when I went to help a friend load up his trailer with all of his stuff. I don't think that he realized just how much stuff he had to load in there. The contents barely fit into the trailer, and the truck that was pulling the trailer and another car were both filled to more than their weight capacity could hold. I think that I can handle the actual moving boxes and furniture. That shouldn't be too hard. After all, I am just moving to the other side of the pool. The hard part will be the cleaning. Yes, after I finally get everything packed, I am going to have to clean. To me that word is a bad word.

Not that my apartment is covered in three inches of dust and spider webs (I swear there is no more than one inch of dust on my shelves), but I am going to have to clean the bathroom top to bottom, including wiping down the baseboards and pipes. I have to pull out the stove and refrigerator and clean behind them. I have to vacuum, dust, clean the windows, scrub the oven and probably other things that I am forgetting.

I must even do the unthinkable, and quite possibly the impossible: clean and defrost my refrigerator and freezer. (Maybe I will finally discover what happened to that lunch

And I am going to have to call all the utility companies, credit card companies and everyone else to change my address.

Finally I am going to have to move all my stuff to the new apartment. Luckily, since I am staying in the same complex, I can move straight to the new apartment, but I know several people who have to rent storage sheds for a week, just because in Manhattan, there isn't much choice for lease timing. For most places, it is an August lease or June lease.

Unless I really screw up on something, this will be my last year at K-State. Therefore, I will probably be moving once again next summer. I do not welcome the idea of another move, but I must make a note to tell myself that wherever I move to I need to find a place to live where I will want to stay for several years. I really don't want to be moving to a different apartment every year.

Moving is just a pain in the tush.

Now, 28 years later, the nationalistic fervor of the Cold War is a history chapter and the mad rush for space has been replaced by a more prudent, fiscally conservative approach to space explo-

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration is now feeling the pinch of tightening purse strings. Since the end of the Apollo program, NASA has been under scrutiny, the target of the budget-cutting hatchet, as Americans want to push more money into domestic programs, not into the black hole of space.

Several keys to keeping America's space program alive were made more obvious by the recent success of the Pathfinder mission to Mars and the calamities besetting the Russian Mir space station. These lessons need to be recognized to point NASA toward the 21st century:

• More robots, fewer people. Now that the moon has been reached, the next step would seem to be a manned Martian mission. This trip would mean a journey of at least several months by a manned probe, a task that should not be undertaken until space travel becomes less of a novelty and more of a routine for astronauts. For stellar bodies as far away as Mars, shown itself to be much more than the universe's slowest-responding remote-controlled vehicle. It is capable of several diverse forms of scientific instrumentation without unnecessary risk to human life. It is this same risk that befell the recent Mars Observer mission, an unmanned probe which was lost upon its approach to the red planet. What separated this disappointment from a tragedy was that no one was at risk. America still feels the pain of the Challenger explosion and the Apollo I fire, and nothing will grind NASA's progress to a halt faster than needless loss of human life.

· Walk before you run. We've all seen the pictures of men on the moon. It's no longer as new or exciting as watching a bug-like wheeled contraption buzzing around on the Martian surface. But if NASA is serious about space exploration, before sending people to bounce around on another planet, the most logical step is more intermedi-

NASA needs to establish an off-world settlement of some permanence. This goes beyond the need to provide support for other planetary missions. The space program needs to be sold to domestic opponents if it is to survive. The best way to do this is to provide services with no terrestrial alternative.

effects of zero-gravity environments. NASA needs to pinpoint more specific, practical industrial applications for material created in zero- or lowgravity, and exploit their financial angle to corporations that wield more political and social influence. America needs to be sold on space again.

• Get help more than give help. American support of the Russian space program has given America access to the Mir space station. Given recent events, though, it's understandable if you're not able to see Mir as anything more than a Hefty bag over a large aluminum trash can. American-Russian cooperation needs to be re-examined.

Astronaut safety cannot be compromised for financial consideration. If this means going to the stars alone, so be it. Russian domestic concern is rising, but they are not the only other space-bound nation anymore. Cooperation with the European Space Agency, Japanese organizations and others should not be overruled in favor of a fading power in the space race.

The biggest reward NASA will reap, however, will take several years to realize. There is a visible spark of imagination and aspiration in the eyes of children watching the Pathfinder pictures, a grsp of wonder and adventure. This is America's future in the stars.

COLUMN SHOWED IGNORANCE WHEN DEALING WITH ATHEISM

I don't know why I read Kevin Bailey's most recent article, "Church to blame for America's decline in the '90s" (July 17), 1 usually only read his column when I need a good laugh. But instead of reading it with a smile, I repeated this line to myself through clenched teeth: "For every atheist who looks forward to Nietzsche's superman, there is a Hitler or a Stalin to destroy that myth."

The ignorance was literally dripping off

Obviously, since I'm an atheist, I think a maniacal, delusional madman should take over the world and rob every man, woman, and child of their natural rights as human beings (note I did not say "God-given

Of course, my being an atheist means that I was raised on some far-off planet, have never heard of the Bible much less read it, and have never set foot in any reputable church.

Most Christians I know think that being atheist means that an individual was never exposed to religion and is completely ignorant of the "wonderful" things that the church has to offer. Exactly the opposite, however, is true. The majority of atheists were raised under the auspicious of Christianity (myself under Presbyterianism) and, for lack of a more appropriate word, converted to atheism because they saw through the thin proverbs and improbable parables of the Bible and began to think for

It's not for a lack of understanding that we are atheists, but because we understand perfectly and chose to

If the space was available for a history lesson on all the wars fought because of religion, I would be more than willing to enlighten whoever cares to listen.

But for now, I think we can all rest a little better knowing that the Crusades of Arrogance and Ignorance have someone to wave their banner

K-State's Jennifer Omohundro is overcoming injuries and working to

STORY BY JEFF PALMER At this weekend's British Open, Fred Couples returned to his past form for three rounds and made a run at the Claret Jug.

Two weeks ago, Nancy Lopez, winner of more than 40 women's tournaments in her career, got her game back just in time to contend for the U.S. Women's Open title.

This year, Jennifer Omohundro hopes to get her game back and help K-State's women's golf team make a run at the Big 12 crown.

Omohundro, who will be a junior this year, is recovering from multiple injuries last year and hopes to regain one of the top spots on K-State's

"Last year, I had a fractured pelvis at the beginning of the year, and after I recovered from that I had back problems, so right now I'm just trying to get my game back," she said.

Omohundro will be entering her third year on the golf team, and she said this year's team will be very competitive. Each player on the team has the potential to be the No. 1 player on the team, and all of them are very close in talent

Omohundro simply wants to get her game back to where it was before her injury.

"I've been playing a lot but the scores aren't where I'd like them to be," she said. "I'm going home in August to practice and play and try to get my swing back."

Home for Omohundro is Sherman, Texas, where she'll have no problem finding a place to play.

Her parents have owned a course in Sherman since she was young, and she's been golfing as long as she can remember. Omohundro said she came to K-State because it was something dif-

"I played a lot of different courses for junior tournaments and high-school competition, so I've seen courses like these. The biggest change for me was the grass," Omohundro said. The women's team practices at the Manhattan Country Club, Stagg Hill Golf Course, Custer Hill at Fort Riley and Rolling Meadows in Junction City.

Omohundro said she likes all the courses, but the layout of the Country Club is her favorite, although each one has something unusual that

Woods, who is revolutionizing the game of golf with his ethnic background, long drives and marketing value, is great for the game of golf, Omohundro said.

"I don't follow professional golf well enough, but I do like to watch Tiger. He has done a lot for the game of golf and will continue to do a lot in the future," she said.

Another golfer who has done a lot for the sport is Lopez.

Lopez was Omohundro's first idol and has been one golfer she has always looked up to. She said it was great to see Lopez get her game back and compete for the Open title.

Omohundro is hoping she can regain her form that helped her to be a main part of K-State's women's team her freshman year.

"I'm going to work hard to get my game back together and will be ready for the fall season when it's time," she said.

American comes from behind to win British Open

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Troon, Scotland - Walking off the 14th green, Justin Leonard never saw the man who pressed against the ropes and held up a bright yellow sign that said, "PARNEVIK."

He didn't need to.

With four holes to play Sunday, Leonard knew he was two strokes behind Jesper Parnevik and equally aware he needed to hole every putt to have any chance of winning the British Open. That's just what he did.

"All day I was behind, and most of the day behind two or three shots," Leonard said. "I hit a lot of shots to 8, 10 feet. Yesterday I missed quite a few of those. Today I made them to be able to make up ground. Then I just hung in there and made some putts on the last few holes.

First, it was a crucial 12-footer for par on the 15th. Then came a 15-foot birdie putt on the next hole to pull him into a tie. And when his 35-foot birdie putt on No. 17 disappeared into the hole, Parnevik was the one who had run out of chances.

"I just knew from about 3 feet out it was right in the center of the hole," Leonard said. "And that's when the hair on the back of my neck stood up."

Leonard rode a hot putter at Royal Troon to win the British Open with a 65 for a 12-under 272 and a three-stroke victory over Parnevik and Darren Clarke. It was the first time Leonard, a former U.S. amateur champion, had been in contention for a major championship. His swing held up under the pressure, and his putter responded as though he had been there before, "When you putt like him, it's not luck," said Fred Couples, who shot 74 while paired with Leonard. "He was around the hole all day. I mean, the guy holed 140 feet of putts out there." The routine was mesmerizing. Leonard stood over his ball, then backed away to check his fine, resumed his stance and rolled in putt after putt.

Leonard, who didn't make a birdie until the 17th hole on Saturday, made six of them on the front nine to go out in 31 and make it a two-man race with Parnevik. Leonard missed his first green of the day on No. 10 and took a bogey, dropping him two strokes behind at 10 under. Although Parnevik made bogey on No. 13 to fall back to 11 under, Leonard looked like he was down to his last hope when his approach at No. 15, a 457-yard par 4, sailed right toward the gallery, coming to rest in a swale some 40 yards from the green. He pitched down a slope to the green to about 12 feet, then pumped his arm out to his side when the putt fell, the first time all day he had shown any emotion. Parnevik's best play with the putter turned out to be from the fairway - he two-putted from 70 yards on the seventh hole Saturday in taking the third-round lead.

He tried to putt from 48 yards away on the par-5 sixth hole and left it 20 feet short, giving him a bogey. And his confidence left him shortly after that.

"I had to scramble to save my life on every hole it seemed like," Parnevik said. Still, he saved par from 7 feet on the 15th hole to stay at 11

under, but then missed a 5-foot birdie putt on No. 16 that would have given him the lead. "I felt like if I made that one, I was going to win," Parnevik said. "Then all of a sudden, I came up to 17, and I watched his birdie, and the air kind of went out of my sails for good."

Parnevik shot a 38 on the back nine, where he spent much of his time trying to save par. With Leonard wielding a hot putter, that wasn't enough.

Crystal ball reveals NFL happenings

Life is good. Football is alive again, as all NFL teams have opened camp. We're less than two months from opening day now.

I have a crystal ball, and I decided to look into it and see what's going to happen this year. I discovered exactly what I thought I would - this is going to be a great season.

I'm not going to tell you everything I learned, but I will let you in on a few secrets.

Actually, these are just my opinions. But I'm a pretty smart guy, and I've never been wrong before.

SAM FELSENFELD is a senior in (sef8701@ksu.edu).

So, football fans, here are a few things you'll see in the NFL this season:

Deion Sanders will intercept a pass at the 50 yard line, cut across the field three times to avoid defenders and end up running 250 yards for a touchdown.

 Orlando Pace will not put the St. Louis Rams over the edge and into the playoffs. • Bill Parcells will not put the New York Jets over the edge and into the playoffs.

• The Seattle Seahawks, after drafting cornerback Shawn Springs, offensive lineman Walter Jones and acquiring linebacker Chad Brown in the free agent market, have put themselves over the edge and into the San Francisco won't miss Elvis Grbac. • The Chiefs won't miss Steve Bono.

• The Miami Dolphins will wish they drafted K-State's Kevin Lockett. Of course, that's because Miami's first-round pick, wide receiver Yatil Green, just tore his anterior cruciate ligament and is gone for the season.

 In a stunning move late in November, the Chiefs, tired of taking quarterbacks from San Francisco, will instead steal the Niners' general manager, Carmen Policy, and sign him to a multi-year deal.

• In the AFC title game at Arrowhead, the Patriots and Chiefs will take the game down to the wire. With the score 24-20 and only 12 seconds left in the game, Kansas City will find itself with a fourth and goal situation from the 6-yard line. Chris Canty will cover Lockett for the play deciding who will go to Super Bowl XXXII. Lockett will line up on the right side, head straight for the corner of the end zone, and out-leap Canty for the pass from Grbac, sending the Chiefs to the big dance.

• The most exciting action at Arizona Cardinals games this year will be watching rookie quarterback Jake Plummer chase cheerleaders around.

 Mike Ditka will be just what the Saints needed. This year, they'll win four games. · Barry Sanders will be better than Emmitt Smith. Barry Switzer will not do as good of a job coaching the Dallas Cowboys as K-State football coach Bill Snyder could. But that's OK - the Cats will will win another bowl game, and the Cowboys will spend Leading team makes the movie 'Nothing to Lose'

SCOTT ALDIS-WILSON

Surprise. For a summer that began with so many disappointments, "Nothing To Lose" proves that talent can still make a comedy without the million-dollar special effects or merchandising tie-ins. In fact, they even remembered to make the movie funny.

Tim Robbins plays Nick Beam, a Los Angeles advertising executive with the perfect life, with a beautiful wife, Ann (played by Kelly Preston). One day, Nick goes home early to surprise his perfect wife, only to find her in bed with his boss. He leaves before anyone knows he was even there.

While driving around town in a stop-sign- and red-light-ignoring daze, he gets carjacked by T (played by Martin Lawrence), a hyperactive petty thief whom Nick kidnaps and takes to Arizona.

However, in the process of taunting T, Nick throws his wallet down back in Los Angeles, so he needs T's money to gas up the car. T, on the other hand, just wants to go home to his family and forget the entire day. A deal is made for Nick to take the would-be carjacker home for gas fare in return.

Along the way Nick starts telling T how he would rob places if he were a thief - going where the big money is, knowing security codes — sort of like his boss's place. So the plot is set. Two guys who can't stand each other stay together for the ultimate score in cash and revenge.

In short, "Nothing To Lose" was funny as heck. Humor fell between the refined style of "A Fish Called Wanda" and the down and dirty of "The Nutty Professor." Still, even a pair of flaming shoes on the side of the road wouldn't have flown without the Lawrence/Robbins team. Thank God for good casting.

These two actors made the movie, despite being unusually Shawshank Redemption" and Lawrence from "Bad Boys," both stretched enough to meet halfway. Lawrence goes from squeezing 200 words into 30 second fits of rage to a sobbing mess. Robbins's acting consisted of about 10 different levels of the psychotic, over-stressed yuppie.

The banter between the characters is reminiscent of "Planes, Trains, and Automobiles" with Steve Martin and John Candy, or "Ferris Bueller's Day Off."

Half of the humor stemmed from awkward situations: Robbins asking the clerk he robs if his delivery was scarier than Lawrence's, a corporate Rent-A-Cop disco dancing in front of the security lasers after quick draw practice with his flashlight and Lawrence sobbing a lot.

The other half consists of both guys just making life hell for one another. "I'm a student of human nature," quips Lawrence early on. "You're a freak of human nature," Robbins shoots back immediately.

A couple of plot turns were also impressive. It even Movie Review attempts to be socially moral without being too campy. For some unexplainable reason, "Nothing To Lose" seems to run slow at times for a comedy. Of course, most of the humor is pretty dry and after four years of Jim Carrey's over-the-top comedic style, any thinking humor might take a while to get used to again.

Other than that, moviegoers have nothing to fear, other than a little overacting from the supporting cast and a fuzzy ending.

It's worth the ticket price. I may even see it again. I miss comedies where I laugh until I am near exhaustion. Even a good team such as Tommy Lee Jones and Will Smith could take a couple of pointers in team chemistry from Robbins and Lawrence.

So go, watch it and be certain to bring someone with sense of

I'd strongly suggest the person you take to this movie be someone you've taken a long road trip with before. It just seems appropriate.

Kansas fishing program provides safe outdoor fun for area children

Local children can participate in a program called "Get Hooked on Fishing, Not Drugs"

Sept. 19-20 at Anneberg Park Lake. Program Director Ed Phelps said the program provides a healthy alternative to more armful diversions. "I'd much rather they be involved with the fishing crowd than the drug crowd," Phelps said.

The program targets children from ages 8 to 12. Door prizes will be given including a rodand-reel set for each participant "Volunteers are not hard to find," George said. The Kansas program is sponsored by the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks and the Kansas Wildscape Foundation.

"There's been a tremendous outpouring of community support for this program," Phelps said. The Tuttle Creek Lake Association started promoting the program in Manhattan.

"In two years in Kansas, 900 kids have been the program," Phelps said. "More than 400 of those have been from Manhattan," he said.

Phelps said he encourages praise and criticism. "The only way to make it better is to talk to us. Everyone has something to contribute," he said. A prize will be awarded to the top two boys and girls who catch the heaviest group of three fish, which is the limit. The lake will be stocked with fish, among them there will be seven white catfish. The participant who catches the first white catfish will win a cash prize.

The program is limited to 200 participants and registration will be opened on Sept. 14 at 1 p.m. at the State Park Office by Tuttle Pond. A round-robin classroom session on fishing and a short video will be featured on Friday. Participants will fish until noon on Saturday and free lunch will be provided. Phelps said both boys and girls attend the clinic and are evenly matched. "I encourage young ladies as well as young guys to come out," Phelps said.

Phelps said he also encourages disabled individuals to participate.

The fishing dock at the lake accommodates wheelchairs.

The first method uses a sanitary sponge to pick up E. coli from various parts of animal carcasses that are the most likely to be contaminated, he said.

Hams, jowls and bellies were tested on pork carcasses. The brisket, flank and rump areas were tested on beef carcasses.

Sponge samplings were initially used by the Food Safety and Inspection Service since they are non-destructive to carcass tissue, Phebus said.

The technique is also taught to non-trained professionals: Excision is the other method using thin pieces of tissue from carcasses. Phebus said excision collects E. coli better than the sponge and gets

That party's senior figures will meet British Prime Minister Tony Blair in London today to plead for rules on precisely when the IRA must start handing over weaponry during negotiations.

Other smaller Protestant parties have already ruled out meeting Sinn Fein. Blair, who took office in May, made the IRA breakthrough possible by ordering Northern Ireland officials to resume discussions with Sinn Fein despite the IRA's resumption of hostilities against British rule of Northern Ireland on Feb. 9, 1996.

The British promised Sinn Fein's

chief negotiator, Martin McGuinness, that in exchange for a renewed IRA truce, Sinn Fein could enter negotiations with other Northern Ireland parties in September - and that those talks would reach a conclusion by May 1998.

Sinn Fein, angry that the last ceasefire had produced only stalemate, had demanded that specific time frame.

The talks began in June 1996 among nine other parties, ranging from Protestant hard-liners to Catholic moderates, but Sinn Fein was excluded because of IRA violence.

Immediately after the cease-fire became official, about 100 protesters started picketing outside military barracks in west Belfast demanding early release of IRA prisoners.

TRAVEL/TRIPS

Suspect may be dressing as a woman to elude authorities

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. - Andrew Cunanan, the chameleon-like suspect in the killing of designer Gianni Versace and four other men, may be eluding authorities by masquerading as a woman, authorities said Saturday.

"Investigators are exploring the possibility that Andrew Cunanan may be dressing as a female," police spokesman Al Boza said in a release. "He may have shaved all of his body hair to enhance this appearance."

The FBI described Cunanan as having very white teeth and an easy smile and an effeminate mannerism.

During the past week, authorities searched an aging, pink hotel, looking for evidence that Cunanan stayed there for up to two months. They found hair cutting equipment, hair dye and magazines, hotel staff said.

Cunanan, accused of shooting Versace on Tuesday, is also the prime suspect in the killings of an ex-lover and a former friend in Minnesota, a developer in Chicago, and a cemetery caretaker in New Jersey.

He was cleared Saturday as a suspect in the death of Dr. Silvio Alfonso, who was killed Thursday at his home about 15 miles from Versace's mansion. Police charged Yosvany Hernandez, 28, with murder and armed robbery in the doctor's slaying.
Cunanan, the target of a massive manhunt, apparently moved easily in this resort isle for the last two months, staying the Normandy Plaza Hotel, pawning a stolen gold coin and frequenting a sex toy store. Vivian Oliva, a clerk at the Cash-on the-Beach pawn shop, remembers Cunanan pawning a gold coin on July 7. The coin was the same reported stolen from Lee Miglin, the Chicago real estate developer Cunanan is accused of killing with a garden tool in May.

"He looked like a very nice guy," said Oliva, who said Cunanan used his real name. "I told him I had to put some acid on the coin to make sure it was real. When I told him I'd give $190, he said, 'C'mon, I worked so hard for this."

Wearing a raincoat, Cunanan bought a bottle of water and was looking for hot food last week at a Circle K convenience store, clerk Mellony Brunson told the Associated Press.

"He was in here between 7 and 8:30 Thursday night," Brunson said. "I'm 100-percent sure."

"I didn't know he was a fugitive by the way he smiled or looked," she said. Two travel agents say they saw Cunanan last week, indicating he was planning his next destination.

"He was very serious," said Blancaluz Pineda, an employee at Swing Travel

Advisers. "I remember him with a serious expression wearing a baseball cap. It was unbelievable he was so close to us."

An employee at a Sheraton Hotel in Fort Lauderdale said he saw a bespectacled and preppy Cunanan posing as a foreigner and asking for directions Friday, The Sun-Sentinel of Fort Lauderdale reported Saturday.

When the employee recognized him from police photos and tried to stall him, Cunanan got suspicious and walked out, the newspaper said. A security video camera showed the man wearing a polo shirt and dark shorts.

The FBI has made a list of wealthy, gay nen it believes are potential targets"and warned them to take precautions, the New York Daily News reported Saturday.

The agency has also contacted gay groups in Boston, Atlanta and New York, fearing he may go there next.

Police have found their most solid leads along Collins Avenue in northern Miami Beach, where merchants said Cunanan lodged, ate and pawned the coin.

The neighborhood, about four miles from Versace's mansion in trendy South Beach, is more of a low-budget tourist hangout.

At the Normandy Plaza, hotel employees said a man looking like Cunanan stayed in three different rooms during a stay as long as two months.

American Zoo Association.

"So far, they just keep telling us to breed this pair," Gulker said.

Sunset Zoo uses a computer program called Animal Record Keeping System to monitor the pandas. It tracks all the animals the zoo has ever had, providing details about birth, diets, mating, health and death. It also tells them where each animal born at the zoo has been transferred.

Even though they prefer colder temperatures in the wild and inhabit mountain forests and bamboo thickets, the pandas at Sunset Zoo can withstand the 100-plus degree summer temperatures. Caretakers spray water into the air continuously to keep the mammals cool and comfortable.

The panda's birthing den is located in the old zoo office, not visible to visitors. Built in the 1930s, the original office was tucked into the side of a hill and today remains cool and dank.

Also known as the bear lounge because it was next to bear exhibits for many years, it sits just off to the left of the panda's outdoor habitat. Inside, Christine Madden, K-State graduate and animal keeper, weighs and monitors the baby panda every day.

The adult pandas have a diet that consists of bamboo, bananas, apples and leaf-eater biscuits. Supplied by Marion Zoological Company in Marion, Kan., the biscuits are fibrous and provide nutritional value to the pandas' diets. The bamboo, which comes from Georgia, is flown to the Manhattan airport and must be kept in a cooler.

The zoo grows its own bamboo and plans to harvest it when the need arises. Red pandas are nocturnal and like to sleep in trees. They are usually undisturbed except for an occasional bird stopping by.

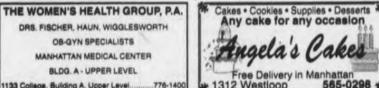

"I have seen a tufted tit-mouse swoop and pull hair out of a sleeping panda, Gulker said. The birds use the hair for their nests and don't seem to upset the pandas in the collection process.

Gentle and easy-going, the panda pair is content to sleep their days away as they continue to multiply for the benefit of other zoos across America.

Board approves golf-course zoning request

► The editorial The editorial board discusses the Colbert Hills Golf Course and its planning. See Page 4.

The first of many steps was taken last Monday to build an 18hole golf course northwest of Manhattan.

The Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board approved the rezoning of 1,040 acres of land and gave it unanimous approval for Riley County Commission

A public hearing will be con-ducted Aug. 7, at 3:15 p.m. in the commission chambers.

The Department of Agronomy, K-State's men's and women's golf teams and minorities are the inspiration and future benefactors of this project, Jim Colbert, K-State graduate and Senior PGA-Tour golfer, said. Colbert was not present for the meet because he was recovering from surgery, but he was able to talk to the board by telephone.

"If you can build a winning football program at K-State, you can build a winning golf team," Colbert said.

The proposed $8.5-million golf course would be the first PGAtour managed collegiate course in the country. The K-State Golf Course Management and Research Foundation will own and develop the Colbert Hills Golf Course.

"It's goes above and beyond other golf courses. It has all the things that are unique in golf," Colbert said.

A skills-based youth golf academy is a part of the project. The academy is designed to introduce golf to youth ages 10-17 who would otherwise not have been exposed to it.

'These are the golfers of the future," Colbert said.

The course would provide agronomy students with a real-life laboratory experience and an opportunity for non-traditional experience.

Somebody said the K-State golf teams would benefit from the yearly Colbert/Fogler Charity Golf Tournament, which in recent years was held in Wichita.

"It will institute hospitality, resources and golf into one. This program will be unique," Joe O'Brien, CEO of the Golf Course Superintendents Association of America, said.

Rezoning posed a legal question to the board. Zoning proposals require the location of structures to be approved. The exact location of the structures to be built in this development is in preliminary stages and subject to

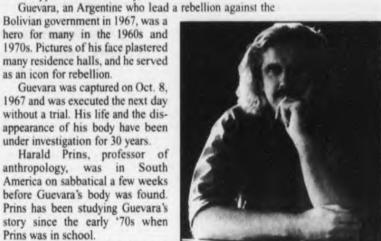

"We have a regulation that's not created for this type of PUD," Jerry Reynold, board member, said.

Linda Morse, board member, said caution needed to be taken. "I want to be careful. We're not basically saying this is it?" she John Young of the engineering firm Schwab-Eaton said he felt the best route was to ask the board for rezoning then bring the proposal to the county commission.

"We felt this was the best route," Young said. "You can't have one without the other."

Prins said Guevara was a medical doctor who came from a prestigious Argentine family, one of the richest families in that country. After Guevara finished his schooling, he took a motorcycle trip into poverty-stricken parts of Argentina,

Bolivia and Chile. According to Guevara's diary, he saw the poverty and mistreatment and felt the sting of hypocrisy. He felt the only way the situation could change was through an overthrow of the military. 'He could have been living a good life at a country club with his glass of champagne and a beautiful woman, but instead he was haggard and ragged to fight for those who couldn't fight for themselves," Prins said. "What's sad is to see all the spectacle of finding the bones. People will forget the man those bones once were." According to Guevara's diary, he went to Bolivia in 1966 to begin what he hoped would be a continental revolution by

Marxists against "Yankee imperialism." After an 11-month campaign, Guevara was captured Oct. 8, 1967. The next day he was executed on orders from the Bolivian president and in the presence of an American

"The U.S. CIA orchestrated the manhunt, and the story goes that a phone call was made to CIA headquarters, and the CIA gave direct orders to execute him,"Prins said.

After the execution, Guevara's body was publicly presented for 24 hours, after which it vanished by orders of Bolivian high command. They did not want his disciples to have a place to pay him homage. However, to prove that he was indeed dead, they amputated his hands and preserved them in formaldehyde as evidence.

Getting volunteers isn't the only challenge. Habitat must also raise money through dona-

To facilitate fund raising, Habitat started a Builders' club. The club consists of individuals who sign up to pledge contributions. The pledges are collected when the ground breaking begins for a new home.

"When we started the club in 1996, we had 27 members. Now we have grown to 146 mem-

Christian said Habitat is trying to increase the number of corporate sponsors.

"Our goal is to get companies like Farm Bureau, Quaker Oats and the American Institute of Baking as consistent contributors," Christian said.

Habitat has already completed negotiations for the purchase of its fourth and fifth homes. The homes are located on 508 Manhattan Ave. and 1130 Pierre St. The family selection committee for Habitat is already in the process of selecting a family for the fourth home.

The fourth home construction is scheduled to begin in the fall.

JonBenet Ramsey's father escalates his own query into daughter's death

DENVER - JonBenet Ramsey's father went public Wednesday with his own investigation of his 6-year-old daughter's death, saying he was frustrated with the police probe and its focus on his family.

He said his investigators have developed solid leads and a profile of the killer that will help them find JonBenet's killer

Ramsey said he has grown increasingly frustrated as police have limited their investigation to members of the Ramsey family.

A high-priced team of experts assembled by Ramsey has been working behind the scenes for seven months. Ramsey found his daughter's beaten and strangled body in the basement of their Boulder home on Dec. 26, eight hours after his wife, Patsy, said she found a ransom note.

There have been no arrests and no suspects named in the case.

District Attorney Alex Hunter in April conceded the parents are a focus of the investigation. He has stressed, however, that authorities are looking at all leads, including the possibility an outsider committed the crime.

Danny's floodwaters kill 2, wash out railroad bridges

CHARLOTTE, N.C. - Floodwaters washed out a railroad bridge Wednesday, sending five freight cars cascading into a creek, and rescue teams searched for a child missing after a 10inch rainfall swamped North Carolina.

At least two deaths Wednesday were blamed on the remnants of Hurricane Danny, which rumbled through the Southeast.

A 59-year-old woman died after being trapped by floodwaters while driving in Charlotte. In Georgia, a 27-year-old man was killed when his car skidded into an oncoming vehicle.

A CSX coal train went into Little Sugar Creek in Charlotte after the trestle gave way. The crew abandoned the train before the bridge collapsed, and five cars went into the creek, spilling about 2,500 gallons of diesel fuel. A public housing project nearby was evacuated because of the fuel spill.

Protestants torpedo plan on Northern Ireland talks

BELFAST, Northern Ireland - Pro-British Protestant leaders rejected a compromise Wednesday designed to allow IRA supporters to join them in Northern Ireland peace talks because it didn't specify when the militants must disarm.

The IRA-allied Sinn Fein party nonetheless is expected to join negotiations set to resume Sept. 15. But there may be no one from the larger Protestant parties to negotiate with.

The guidelines, which British and Irish governments had spent a year crafting, said the Irish Republican Army and pro-British paramilitary groups should make due progress on disarming during the peace talks, under the guidance of an international commission.

Fighting, looting leaves Congo's capital in ruins

BRAZZAVILLE, Republic of Congo - Stray dogs feed on decaying corpses. Gunmen drive stolen luxury cars through a downtown gutted by looters.

A few months ago, Brazzaville was a tranquil haven for people fleeing chaos across the river in what was then Zaire. Now, after an inconclusive but destructive 40-day civil war, it is a wreck.

Roughly half of the city's 800,000 residents have fled into the countryside because of the fighting between rival militias - one loyal to President Pascal Lissouba and the other to the former military dictator, Denis Sassou-Nguesso.

A cease-fire took effect July 14, but only this week has it been safe enough for local Red Cross workers to venture into central Brazzaville, capital of this nation on the Atlantic side of Central Africa.

TOBAN HENRY/Collegian

Every summer, crowds of people craving cotton candy, carnival rides and the sounds of the midway flock to CiCo park for the Riley Country Fair.

The annual event has been a tradition since 1926.

Although the 4-H portion of the fair began July 2 with a dog show, it officially begins today with a parade and ends Monday. These five days are called Fair Days.

The parade begins at 6 p.m. at City Park and will travel on Poyntz Avenue through downtown Manhattan.

All the individual 4-H clubs will have floats centered around the fair's theme, which is "Building a Bridge to the Future.' Alan Ladd, Riley County extension director, said a variety of events are planned for Fair Days. "Basically we have everything from A to Z," Ladd said.

Ladd said arts and crafts, woodworking, crops, needlework, livestock, photography and bread baking are a few of the projects local 4-H participants have on exhibit at Pottorf Hall.

Projects and animals exhibited by 4-H members from the 18 4-H organizations in Riley County are an important part of the Riley County Fair.

Members, from ages 7 to 18, work for months on the projects they display and have judged at the fair.

Most of the 558 Riley County 4-H members enter one or more projects in the fair.

Some may enter as many as 20. With children exhibiting numerous projects apiece, the total equals out to more than in the fair schedule," Janice Buchman, 4-H secretary, said. Buchman said members can enter projects in a variety of categories, including livestock, foods, arts and crafts, rocketry, needlework and photography.

Buchman said there's also a Mini 4-H division for 4 and 5-year-olds to enter projects.

4-H members are not required to enter a project to be Sharolyn Flaming, extension agent in family and consumer science, said most of the judging at the fair is through interviews to see if the child has learned.

"They want to see that a child has grown from the project," Flaming said.

Flaming said interview judging takes more time than regular judging, but it's worth the extra time because the children are judged individually according to their own skill

Flaming said she wants people to know that 4-H is not just for rural children anymore.

"It's really much broader than that," Flaming said. Flaming said Riley County 4-H is equally divided between rural and urban children, with projects in categories like rocketry becoming more popular. Also, a self-determined category offers children the freedom to show projects that can't be classified in any other category. Members can pick any topic to research. Projects such as notebooks full of baseball cards and homemade computers can be entered in this category. Judging for the different divisions takes place daily through Monday. Riley County 4-H is also sponsoring a bake sale, a variety show and a livestock sale.

Golf course needs to reconcile image of diversity with reality anhattan got a little closer to being home to a new 18-hole golf course in a meeting

Monday, but the meeting's audience was mostly homogeneous.

According to the initial announcement of the project earlier this year, one of the stated goals of the Colbert Hills Golf Course was to attract sectors of the community traditionally less involved in the sport of golf, specifically minorities and women.

Only two members of the audience at Monday's meeting were either, and both of those were media representatives.

Colbert Hills is facing a challenge of living up to its media line, but this is a challenge that even sports figures of astronomical stature have difficulty meeting. Tiger Woods, who has > breathed new life into the sport of golf and has been called "The Great Integrator," practices on a male-only course.

This discrepancy between image and reality is something Colbert Hills can avoid in its embryonic stages.

The challenge of appealing to a diverse population is more formidable here in Manhattan, where there is less racial diversity as a whole to draw upon. Still, this is a challenge that the developers of the course are more than capable of meeting.

Establishing and supporting local golf groups for female players and minorities, especially children, is essential in meeting this goal. In addition, the developers should coordinate with local businesses to offer inexpensive activities for youth groups, from summer clinies to Big Brother/Big Sister outings for area children. When introduced to the game at an early age, children develop skills and enthusiasm which they are incapable of acquiring later in life.

Colbert Hills, by appealing to these parts of our community, can only help not only its own growth, but also the sport of golf as well.

What happens next could affect the gay community's attempt for acceptance

I'd love to give Andrew Cunanan a couple hundred thousand dollars to leave the country. If he is ever captured by the authorities and put on trial it will set the gay-rights movement back two

For those of you who live under a rock, I'll sum up the news of the last few days.

Andrew Cunanan is the prime suspect in the death of Gianni Versace and four other men across the country - an ex-lover and a friend in Minnesota, a developer in Chicago and a cemetery caretaker in New Jersey. All of the dead appear to have ties to Cunanan in one way or another, except for the cemetery caretaker who was in a bad place at a bad time and happened to have a good truck. I guess the big news is Andrew Cunanan is gay. It gets worse. He is gay, handsome and dresses well. He has been known to enjoy the company of wealthy, older gay men who would provide financial support for him.

The bigger news is he allegedly killed some allegedly straight people and a famous designer. If he would have stuck to killing only gay men, the entire nation would have handled him the same way they treated AIDS in the early 1980s -So there are a few less gay men, so what?" But Cunanan allegedly killed a married, successful man in Chicago and a world famous designer. Not that either of them is not gay, but make better news than a few dead fags. poor, innocent, straight victims of an possibly outraged, over-the-hill homosexual playboy. As if the story couldn't get anymore sensational, now it is reported Cunanan has shaved off all of his body hair and is dressing like a woman to elude authorities. I hate to put a damper on the investigation but do they know how many drag queens there are in and around Miami Beach, Fla.?

The FBI is beginning to scare me. I don't know what frightens me more - that they know he shaved off all of his body hair or that the authorities have to share the intimate detail that he

WHO HELPS THE NATION'S HOMELESS?

Lack of help for homeless stems from spiritual, political reasons he man, clothes clinging to his emaciated frame, stumbled and fell. The cold did little to clear his muddled mind. He had fallen at the door of a lighted building. so leaning back, he struggled to make himself comfortable Suddenly the lights in the building went out. The change barely registered with the man. He grunted, let out a low moan, and shifted the weight off his sore left shoulder. The door beside him opened, and a face came quickly into view. It was just a face neither threatening, nor especially peaceful. It gazed curiously down at him, so he gazed right back. Finally, the face spoke.

"What's your name?" The man could manage only a low moan

"How's that?" the face replied.

"Emory. Why?" As Emory slowly looked up, he realized that the face was attached to a body. "May I sit with you?" the young man who was attached to the face asked. "Free country."

The young man sat down next to Emory, the smell causing him to cringe. Emory noticed.

Not knowing what to say, the young man asked, "What brings you here?" Silence.

'What a dumb question,' the young man thought to himself.

"Uh ... is there anything I can do to help "A place to stay ... maybe some food ...

warmth - need to get warm ... The night was cold, and Emory's thin coat barely covered his slender shoulders. A violent shiver gripped his whole body. He momentarily wondered if the young man could help. He dismissed the thought.

No one ever helped.
"I'll get you a blanket. I'll try to find you a place to stay."

Emory gave a derisive snort. That's what they all say. Just two weeks before he had been kicked out of the homeless shelter for reasons he didn't understand. And now this whipper-snapper - he just couldn't believe Emory felt something drop over his drawn up knees. He glanced down and saw a fuzzy, yellow blanket draped over his legs. 'Mmmm ... such a warm blanket,' he thought. What's going on?

He looked up at the young man suspiciously. The fellow was unlocking the door to the building he had come out of.

"Come on in. It's a lot warmer inside," the young man offered. "I'm going to call someone. They'll find you a place to stay."

The young man talked about how he boarded at an older gentleman's house, or he would take Emory home with him. But, this fellow he was calling, he would take care of Emory. The young man was just sure of it.

After only a few minutes of hushed telephone conversation, which Emory was oblivious to as he enjoyed the warmth of the building, the young man hung up with a

"Uh, he said that the place where he, uh works, doesn't really have a program to help fellows like you. He said to check the homeless shelter. The one you got kicked out of," the young man said dejectedly. Emory was not surprised.

In a nation as rich as America, with so many people who have so much, why do so many go hungry, stay cold, have no home,

I think it is because we, as Americans, are basically a selfish lot. We look after ourselves, think of ourselves, and chase the forever elusive "American Dream." For all our refinement, we are generally self-centered, brutish nation.

We would rather have an extra car than take in a homeless man or woman - what a drain on the finances they are.

We would rather debate the merits of our favorite politician's latest political maneuverings than get out and help someone in need.

We would rather teach our children how to be social climbers than how to reach out and help someone who has been less blessed than they. What we love is reflected in who or what we serve. And we serve ourselves.

Politicians, lawyers, doctors, teachers no one is immune. A person of one race or creed is as guilty as anyone else. No one escapes the sordid disease of selfishness. Rex Miller, owner and manager of Christian Books & Gifts, had the following to say about the plight of the homeless in this country: "Our nation lacks the political will to do anything about the homeless problem. We have plenty of resources in America to address the problem - if we would only do what God calls us to do.'

I agree with Miller's assessment. Until America acquires both the political will and the spiritual motivation, people will still die. For political will without spiritual motivation is simply pouring money on a problem which runs much deeper than money. It truly helps no one. And, spiritual motivation, without political will, pierces the heart, but neglects the body.

True help - and hope - is found only when both are present.

Help springs from political will - hope springs from the soul

K-State Salina receives $1 million

K-State-Salina will receive $1 million from the estate of Marian W. "Dolly" Hardman

The money will be used in our aerial technology program," Dennis Kuhlman, dean of the College of Technology and Aviation, said. "Our first priority will be to support women in our pilot program.

Hardman had been a pilot for more than 60 years.

She was also a member of the Ninety-Nines Inc., an International Organization of Women Pilots.

This year would be Amelia Earhart's 100th birthday, and I think that was the spirit of Ms. Hardman," Kuhlman said. "She loved flying, loved the thrill of it and the freedom of flight. We are part of the aviation community here, and she saw us as a way to support that area."

Hardman died May 1, 1997, at the age of 97. KSU Foundation received word from Hardman's attorney after her death that she had donated money to K-State

"The sad thing about a donation like this is that you can't go to the person and say thank you," Kuhlman said.

Gary Hellebust, KSU Foundation CEO, said Hardman's bequest is an example of the dedication of K-State alumni.

'We raise about $25 million a year, and on an annual basis, donations of $1 million or more from alumni comprise of $6 to 9 million," Hellebust said.

Hardman graduated from K-State in 1925 with a bachelor of science degree. She returned to Downs to work at the family business, Hardman Lumber.

Hardman Lumber had expanded to cover Kansas, Colorado and Nebraska before it was sold to Kansas Lumber Homestore Inc., in 1990.

Manhattan opens doors on renovated homeless shelter despite threat of low funds

July 13-19 was Manhattan Emergency Shelter Inc. Homelessness Awareness Week in Manhattan. To finish off the week-long campaign to increase awareness and support in Manhattan, Mayor Bruce Snead cut the ribbon at the renovated shelter and initiated the open house.

"There are people in need," Snead said. "Whether there are hundreds or thousands, they exist, and we need to help."

The purpose of the activities and open house was to increase awareness and funding.

'We are expecting a $32,000 deficit this year, and we wanted to increase community awareness," Junell Norris, executive director of the MESI, said. "We wanted to let the public see the shelter, tour the Sunflower House and see what we MESI is a free shelter to people who find themselves homeless. Homeless people can include local citizens experiencing a crisis, people rebuilding after a financial disaster or emotional and personal failures and transients moving through to another community. However, transients are only allowed to stay two days.

While at the shelter, Norris said the residents are required to complete daily chores, try to remedy their problem and take classes offered at the shelter, which include life skills, basic nutrition, budgeting, drug and alcohol awareness and health

The shelter also offers counseling, referrals to social services and a family environment that promotes responsibility.

Once residents have established stable employment and are working on their situations successfully, they can move into the Sunflower Transitional Living House. The Sunflower House bridges the gap between the shelter and living independently, Norris said.

"To change from the shelter to living in Manhattan is estimated that a person would need approximately $800," Norris said. "At the Sunflower house, residents pay a fee like rent and can live there for a year while they get back on

City commission ponders fuel partnership

NATE JENKINS

Tim Riemann, K-State student body president and city administrative intern, presented the Clean Cities program to the commission Tuesday evening.

He was responding to a recent request from the Manhattan City Commission to explore alternative fuel possibilities for the city, one of the top priorities outlined in the proposed 1998 city budget.

Although no formal action was taken by the commission after the presentation by Reimann, all the commissioners agreed that the Clean Cities program should be pursued for both environmental and long-term financial reasons

"We should really take the lead on this because it is the first step in implementing alternative fuels," Mayor Bruce Snead said. "I don't want Manhattan to have brown air like some cities do."

The Clean Cities program is a locally based partnership between government and industry that is coordinated by the U.S. Department of Energy. The main goal is to expand fuel use from just gasoline, and, on a national level, to create a legitimate alternative fuels market. One of the elements needed to start the program, a local industry that produces and sells alternative fuels, is something that Manhattan already provides.

Troy Design and Manufacturing, located on the north end of the industrial park behind Wal-Mart, not only produces and sells alternative fuels, but converts vehicles to run on natural gas and designs electrical-powered cars as

City Manager Gary Greer said a relationship between the city and TDM would be ideal because TDM could provide fuel for city cars and the public without sacrificing its status as a private industry.

Greer said approximately 60 percent of city fuels like natural gas or compressed propane. He said that percentage will increase in the future as technology in alternative fuels conversion increases.

Four other steps need to be taken for Manhattan to be a part of the Clean Cities pro-· Appoint a Clean Cities Coordinator that has access to the City Manager and serves as the director for the program.

· Hold meetings with people interested in implementing alternative fuel vehicle programs, with an equilibrium of city officials and private citizens and businesses.

· Develop objectives, organization and timetables for the program.

• Draft a memorandum that states the relationship between the Department of Energy, the city and other authorities.

Funding for alternative fuel options would not have to come solely from local funds. Greer and Snead both said Manhattan would qualify for state and federal grants to help get the project off the ground and begin converting cars to use more environmentally sound fuels.

In other business, Rick Mann, the chairman of the Chamber of Public Affairs Commerce Committee, asked commissioners for concerns that he could present to the Kansas Legislative delegation in January. Mann has already received input from Riley County and the School District.

Commissioners said property taxes and a perceived lack of communication between the city and state on finance issues are the main concerns.

Currently, the state imposes a property tax lid that strictly controls the rate of property taxes.

vehicles could be converted to use alternative Although Manhattan-property tax rates are well below the lid law, the commission said it restricts their ability to make financial decisions that they are accountable for.

Mayor Snead said that aside from the lid law he is opposed to any further restrictions by the state on city spending.

The commission also requested Mann to support amendments to the Kansas Open Meetings Act that would permit more private interaction opportunities among locally elected governing members. The Act presently restricts informal discussions between governing members outside of meetings to prevent unlawful conflict of interests between public business and personal profit.

Snead also said that the state should do a better job of informing the commission about changes in local grants that are given to the community. He said that often times the city is left holding the bag when the state backs out of a financial obligation that they have already made, and it ends up costing the city an unreasonable amount of money.

Kaw Valley Rodeo comes to Manhattan

JEFF PALMER

Bull-riding, calf-roping, barrel-racing and many other events will be part of the festivities when one of the top-five midsized outdoor rodeos in the country comes to Manhattan this weekend.

Members of the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association (PRCA) and the Women's Professional Rodeo Association (WPRA) will be in town to test their skills in seven different events starting tonight at the Kaw Valley Rodeo.

"We are really proud of our rodeo. We always put on a good show, and the audience has a good time," Char Henton, secretary of the Kaw Valley Rodeo Association, said.

In addition to bull-riding, calf-roping and barrel-racing, contestants will participate in steer-wrestling, team-roping, bareback and saddle bronco-riding.

The Kaw Valley Rodeo is a PRCA-sanctioned event in which contestants will attempt to earn points that will help them to participate in the National Finals later this year in Las Vegas.

A rider earns one point for every dollar earned at each rodeo, and the top-15 contestants in each event go to Las Vegas.

In order to earn money, Henton said the participants must win their event unless there is added money. Added money comes from the sponsoring committee and then only the top-four or five places get a check.

"Everyone wants to win, but these riders are like one big family. They are friends, and they pull for each other to do well and help each other out," Henton said.

In the past, the Kaw Valley Rodeo has attracted such stars and world champions such as Lane Frost. The movie "8 Seconds" was based on Frost

Other stars include Ty Murray, Joel Edmondson and Charmain Rodman, who Henton said was world champion for at least five years in a row.

This year will be no different. Many of the top riders will be in Manhattan, including a couple of local favorites.

Chancey Larsen, Manhattan High School graduate and Ray Wessel, K-State graduate, will both compete this weekend.

Every night there will be someone of interest to watch, Henton said, not to mention many other fun activities

At the beginning of each night, the K-State parachute club will parachute in with the American flag. Kids will compete in mutton bustin', an activity where children ride a big, woolly sheep. The specialty act is Leon and Vicki Adams, who do tricks while riding on horses and bulls.

The festivities begin each night at 8 in Wells Arena at CiCo Park. Reserved seats are on sale now for $8 or tickets can be purchased at the gate for $10. Children are admitted free Thursday with a can of food or $4 without.

Henton said, "This is one of the finest rodeos in the country. We've had worldclass participants in the past, and we draw good contestants."

Chiefs sign defensive end Dan Williams

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - The Kansas City Chiefs said Wednesday they signed former Denver defensive end Dan Williams.

Williams was a first-round pick who was cut by the Broncos when the team found it could not cut his salary as much as it wanted.

The Chiefs have their own salary problems as tackle Dan Saleaumua has so far refused to take a pay cut the Chiefs want. He could be released.

Kansas City was weakened on the defensive line when the club decided to release end Neil Smith, who signed with the Broncos.

Williams was cut by the Broncos because of an NFL rule that prohibits a player's salary from being cut by more than 30 percent of the value of the first year of his contract.

Williams, who had surgery eight times in four years with Denver, had agreed to a $300,000 contract. But the Broncos would have had to pay him $544,000 less than the NFL rule.

To make room for Williams, the Chiefs put cornerback James Hasty on the "reserve - did not report" list. Hasty, scheduled to make $1 million this year, is unhappy with the contract he signed in 1995.

The Chiefs are installing a new defensive scheme that features a threeman front and is designed to take advantage of the pass-rushing skills of linebacker Derrick Thomas.

want my own baseball team. Really, I'm serious. Once I have about $1 billion, I want to buy my own baseball team. I will have the taxpayers in my community build a stadium with 100,000 seats, and every game will sell out because I will have only the best players, and they will generate a lot of interest and rev-make money off television and radio revenues and a lot more off merchandising

Then I will be able to have a payroll more than $100 million, and I will trade and buy the very best players in the majors. I have given some thought to who would be on my team, and I came up with the following list.

Starting behind the plate I want Mike Piazza, who is currently employed by the Dodgers.

(mattspu@ksu.edu) It was a close call between Piazza and Ivan Rodriguez. Rodriguez is a little better defensively, but Piazza is better at the plate and has a bit more power, which is a must if I want to draw the fans necessary to meet my payroll. At first base I need the Big Hurt, Frank Thomas. Yes, I am passing on Mark McGwire, but just look at Thomas' stats — an average of .370, 80 RBIs and 21 home runs. This guy has the consistent numbers that I need. If however, I would have an American-League team, McGwire would be my designated hitter and backup first base-

At second base, I want Roberto Alomar. I don't care if he spits in my face or anybody else's.

Third base and shortstop are my problem positions. Cal Ripken is my first choice for either of these positions. Anybody who can play every game for 14 years with continued productivity like Ripken has is worth the investment.

For lack of a better third baseman I will put Ripken there and find myself a shortstop. Jeff Blauser is my choice for now because he is a proven player and can perform in the pressure games of the postseason, but I will keep my eye on Nomar Garciaparra.

From what I have seen of him, he looks to be a promising young player. For now, though, I will go with Blauser.

Moving on to the outfield, I must certainly have Ken Griffey Jr. in center. Any questions?

I also want Larry Walker in right and Tony Gwynn in left. The way I see it, these are two guys who are seriously flirting with hitting .400, and I must have both of them. I want Walker in right for his arm. This guy has a cannon and would be able to throw out those foolish enough to try for an extra base.

Look at Gwynn's career. He consistently hits over .300 and maybe even .400 this year. Both these players are a must. Now that I have selected my fielders, I must move on to my pitching staff. I will go with a five-man rotation in the following order. Roger Clemens, Greg Maddux, Denny Neagle, Jimmy Key and David Cone. This season, these guys have combined for more than 60 wins already. Then I will put Mark Wholers, Mariano Rivera and John Wetteland in the bullpen. With these guys I figure that my team will win at least 100 games for the season. OK, I realize that this will never happen, but what if it did? What if I, or someone else, could put together a team as great as this? This team would be the greatest in history.

We would dominate the league every year. The players would have so many rings they wouldn't be able to wear them

Well, I would try if I had the money, so if there is anyone out there who would like to give me all that money so I could put this megateam together I would appreciate it.

And I guess I could always play fantasy baseball and get myself my megateam.

DARREN WHITLEY STORY BY SAM FEL Former Wildcat Gaskins finds success in NFL

1995, linebacker Percell phone call." Gaskins anchored K-State's defense - the nation's topranked unit, leading it in tackles as a senior.

It was his third season as a starter, and his second straight gaining All-America honors He was a top candidate for the Butkus Award - given annually to the top linebacker in the country - and he displayed his athletic ability every time he squared off against an opponent, delivering bone-crushing hits game after game. When spring rolled around, Gaskins was preparing for the NFL draft. At 6'0", 225 pounds, some scouts thought he was undersized to play linebacker in the league. But he had speed and excellent athletic ability - he was quicker than most linebackers, and he won an NCAA high-jump title in 1993. And he had power. A look at game films reveals the ferociousness of his hits. One of the most important steps for prospective draftees is a strong performance at one of the NFL combines - an arena for the players to be tested for speed, strength and agility. So Gaskins waited for an invitation.

And waited. But it never came.

"I didn't get to go to any of the combines," he said. "I wasn't invited to any of them. All-American my junior and senior years, I was up for the Butkus Award, I was the leading tackler on the top defense in the country, and I didn't get a single letter or

But now, Gaskins is getting the last laugh on those who thought he wasn't an NFL prospect.

Despite not having any combine showings for the scouts to evaluate, he was drafted in fourth round - 105th overall - of the 1996 draft by the St. Louis Rams.

The Rams inked him to a three-year contract, and now he finds himself on its roster.

THE BEGINNINGS

He just reported to camp last week to begin his second season in the league. Last year as a rookie, he played in 15 of the team's 16 games, including a start in the final game of the season against New

In that game against the Saints, he also led the team in tackles. Not bad for a guy who didn't get invited to a single combine. Gaskins also started three of four exhibi-

He suffered his first case of nerves during the preseason when the Rams traveled to play the Pittsburgh Steelers in sold-out Three Rivers Stadium.

He was backing up linebacker Roman Phifer, who had to leave the game with a hamstring injury. When he checked in and prepared for the snap, he looked at the Steelers' formation.

Gaskins said he thought Pittsburgh was oing to use running-back Jerome Bettis, a 5'11", 243-pound battering ram notorious for running over defenders, in an isolation a play designed to make it Bettis vs. Gaskins, one-on-one.

He thought it was his time to get tested, to see if he had what it takes to make it in the NFL.

He was right. "They gave Bettis the ball and ran an iso straight at me. But I nailed him for a loss," he said. "That's the last time I was nervous."

One of the reasons he hasn't felt those nerves is because of his playing style. He only has one way to describe himself "Intense," he said. "Very intense."

THE DIFFERENCE

He took that intensity from K-State into the NFL, including two games against the traditionally powerful San Francisco 49ers a far cry from the K-State vs. Akron matchup during his senior season with the

He said that not only are the players better, but they're all intense like he is.

"In the NFL, they're coming after you. Every snap, they're off the ball and coming after you," he said. "In college, if it's a blowout by the third quarter, you can get pretty laid back and have a conversation with the guys lining up against you before the snap

Gaskins quickly learned to compete the NFL way. He had to. While playing against San Francisco, Jerry Rice — arguably the greatest wide receiver in the history of the game - caught a short pass over the middle and it was up to Gaskins to bring him

"I caught him coming across the middle. He's the type of player who just keeps coming at you," he said.

Gaskins said the toughest player for him to stop was Niners' tight end Brent Jones, but he still got the job done. He wasn't used to consistently taking on players with the fierceness of Jones while with the Wildcats, but he's kept his intensity level high in order Another adjustment he's made is the lengthy NFL schedule. In college, Gaskins never had to play more than a dozen games a year, including non-conference and bowl But in the NFL, the schedule includes four preseason games, 16 regular-season games and the possibility of up to another four games in the playoffs.

"It's a beating on your body. By the 12th game, it's tough," he said. "I just have to keep in shape. You can't let yourself fall behind. That's the nature of this game. There're no guarantees."

As if jumping from the NCAA to the NFL last season wasn't enough, this year Gaskins has to deal with a new coach and a new system. Again.

Two years ago, he played in K-State coach Bill Snyder's system. Last year, he played for Rich Brooks' system with the Rams. But now, Brooks is gone.

Dick Vermeil took over the reins of the Rams this season and brought former NFL head coach Bud Carson in as his defensive SDB-FM 91.9, DB92 to most, is K-State's FM radio station, located on the third floor of McCain Auditorium and available to the University for music, programs and promotions.

MILE SERVICE FRANCISCO IN

Len Potillo, the new station manager for DB92, said the main problem is that too many potential listeners don't even know the station is there.

"People hear 'DB92,' and they say, 'What is that?"" he said. "That needs to change." Potillo, 32, is better known to faithful DB92 listeners as Smooth B. He plays host to the nightly urban program "Jam the Box." He was the first disc jockey on "Jam the Box," and was eventually put in charge of programming by outgoing station manager Joe Montgomery.

Now, Potillo said, the program is the most popular show on DB92, surpassing the new album rock that can be heard most of the broadcast day.

A lot of changes are coming for DB92 with Potillo in charge. The most fundamental change will be a solid identity that the station has lacked for a long time, he said.

Montgomery said he agreed the goals of the station have been largely up in the air since he became station manager in 1989 and when he was a graduate assistant in charge of operations.

"The goals of the station aren't really easy to define," he said. "We've had a collective philosophy about how things should be run, and it's never been just my personal radio station.

The A. Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications has a board of directors that help administrate the station. They decided not to renew Montgomery's contract this year and instead hired Potillo. Potillo said Montgomery gave him his first big opportunity on the air with "Jam the Box." "I like the fact that they're hiring from within the ranks," Montgomery said.

Potillo spent one year at NYU, then five years at K-State, earning a bachelor of science in social sciences and media relations. He also brings a year and a half of commercial radio experience to DB92 from KISS-FM 107.3 in Kansas City and played host of a syndicated dance music program, Street

In addition, Potillo has been recognized as the DJ personality of the year in Kansas two years running, and Impact, a trade magazine among broadcasters, has named him one of the top 108 DJs on the air for the past two years, he

Manhattan is a much smaller market, Potillo said, and he isn't expecting DB92 to run like a large market station. DB92 isn't commercial, but he said he'd like to see it promoted more like one.

"I'd like to see us be No. 1 in the area," he said. The cutting-edge rock will still be a feature of DB92, he said, but he'll be pushing for a more mainstream sound. The program list of music will be planned to flow better than it has in the past, he said.

"I want listeners to turn on the station and say, 'That's a good song,' not 'What's that?"" he said.

The DJs, still largely a volunteer force, will be more actively trained encouraged and offered tips and ideas to improve their skills, he said.

'They'll be getting a feel for commercial radio," he said. "For those that want to make a career out of being a DJ, they'll get an edge over the competition."

DJs will still take listener requests, he said, but probably not during normal days, perhaps while promoting a large event when an entire hour could be filled by requested music

"The station should reflect how you (the listener) want the music to sound," he said. "Requests are great to get listeners involved, but they should be limited somewhat." In addition to all the program changes, DB92 will be doing more concert and event promotion, Potillo said.

Eric Melin, music director for DB92, has been working hard to promote September's Welcome Back concert held every year in City Park, with Frogpond as lead act, Potillo said. As time goes on, Potillo would like to see even bigger name bands in Manhattan, promoted by DB92, he said.

DB92 will be giving away more tickets, T-shirts, compact discs and other promotional gear given out by music distributors, he said

"I want the record labels to say, 'These guys are helping us sell records," he said.

Montgomery said he'll be watching the station, but has a lot of faith in Potillo.

"It's hard to just turn your back," he said. "I'll be interested to see how things evolve. It's almost like having a kid, I guess - it was my baby for eight years. But there's some relief of responsibility, too.' Potillo said he hopes he can make DB92 develop the way he wants.

"I'm just gonna make it fun for students," he said. "That's the goal."

Bed and Breakfast offers guests the comforts of home without the threat of washing dishes

SERAPHINE NAEYMI

Manhattan now offers two new reasonably-priced getaways that are not far away. The Morning Star is one of the two new bed and breakfasts that opened this year in Manhattan.

The Morning Star is located on 14th Street across from City Park. The house has a calmness that generates the comfortable atmosphere of home. Laurie Pieper and Bill Kaszer are innkeepers at the Morning Star, and their dogs Millie and Ginger give well-mannered greetings when visitors enter the get approval to open the bed and breakfast. "When we had the Morning Star's open house all of our neighbors came by to look at what we had done. It was neat to see everyone coming together and giving us their support,"

The Morning Star has many personal touches that add to the special feeling that the guest may get when first stepping through its door.

Almost all of the paintings decorating the house were done by Pieper's grandmother. There is a portrait in the dining room of Pieper's grandmother as a child.

Kaszer and Pieper are also going to hang two quilts made by Charlotte Herr on the living room walls. The mixture of antiques and contemporary furniture add to the guest's personal experience.

Pieper said the added luxuries of the Morning Star reminds the guest that they are on a vacation. Pieper makes a Body resembling suspect in Versace murder found on houseboat

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. - A body resembling Andrew Cunanan was found with a self-inflicted gunshot wound in a houseboat that SWAT teams surrounded and stormed Wednesday night.

"There is a similarity in the description of the victim that was found," Chief Richard Barreto said at a hastily called news conference. "Beyond that, there is nothing else to indicate at this time it is Barreto said officials were awaiting forensic tests to confirm the body was that of Cunanan, whom residents had reported seeing in the area since Gianni Versace was slain July 15.

The houseboat is 2 1/2 miles north of the mansion where Versace was gunned

"The general feeling is that this very well may be Cunanan, but the official word hasn't come down yet," said Miami Beach Mayor Seymour Gelber.

Police sources said the body may have been the victim of a self-inflicted gunshot wound. ABC News reported that a .40-caliber handgun, the same type of weapon Cunanan was believed to have used in a cross-country killing spree, was found near the body.

More than 100 police and FBI agents descended on the large blue, two-story houseboat after a caretaker told officers he was fired upon by an unknown man. Police set up a perimeter around the houseboat, on the ground and in boats, and closed off Miami Beach's busy Collins Avenue for several blocks.

At one point during the four-hour standoff, officers in black flak jackets fired volleys of tear gas and shouted "Come out! Come out!"

Minutes later, at least six SWAT team members carrying rifles and a shield walked slowly in a line into the house. After nearly an hour inside, police announced their search had come up empty. More than an hour later, reports began to surface of a body.

A source told the AP that the body was found on the second floor of the houseboat, where bedrooms are located. The source said investigators believe the shot that the caretaker heard may have been the one that killed the man.

Cunanan, the prime suspect in Versace's killing and four other slayings, is the FBI's most-wanted fugitive. He has managed to escape capture even though his picture has been plastered on television, newspapers, the Internet and wanted posters.

David Todini saw a man in the vicinity of the houseboat who fit Cunanan's description, wearing a bandana and carrying a backpack the night before Versace was killed.

"It looked out of place because there was no sun, there was no reason for him to have a bandana on his head," Todini said. "I said to myself, 'This guy's trying to disguise himself.'

In Minnesota, Cunanan has been charged in the death of a former lover, David 'Madson, and is suspected of killing a friend, Jeffrey Trail. He is also suspected in the death of Chicago developer Lee Miglin and charged in the killing of New Jersey graveyard caretaker William Reese.

The FBI continues to receive tips on Cunanan's whereabouts nationwide. This week, sightings of Cunanan have been reported in New Hampshire, North Carolina and North Dakota. None have Prins doesn't think the discovery of Guevara's body will reignite any political revolution.

Berry said a police composite sketch drawn from Prather's description looked "just like the victim."

As she was led in handcuffs into the Roosevelt County jail late Wednesday, she shouted to reporters, "I know the main suspect. I got coerced into doing some things I shouldn't have done."

The small woman with light brown hair wore a large baseball jersey and had a visible 3-inch cut on her cheek

She was booked on charges including making a false report and seven counts of harassment — one for each other person on her "hit list." If convicted, she faces nearly eight years in prison.

Police Capt. Lonnie Berry said he no longer believes the individuals had anything to worry about. He said Prather told police she had distributed the flier.

According to the affidavit, Prather acknowledged she had been attacked by one person, a woman she said she knew.

Police interviewed a handyman and neighbors who reported seeing no one at Prather's apartment at the time of the alleged attack. Based on that information, police made the arrest.

Another one of Gaskins' old K-State teammates, former receiver Kevin Lockett, was drafted in the second round by the Kansas City Chiefs this year.

COMPETITION

This year, the Rams and Chiefs play on Oct. 26, and there's a likelihood that Lockett will catch a short pass over the middle, and it will be Gaskins' responsibility to stop him.

So what will it be like for Gaskins, the big hitter with a purple heart and a blue and yellow jersey, to hit against Lockett?

"Kevin knows me, and he knows that I'll try to take his head off. He'd better have his chin strap buckled," Gaskins said. "I say that, but I do have a lot of respect for Kevin. He's a guy who, when he first came to K-State, he was running 4.8s and 4.9s. But he's worked hard and done a lot for himself."

Hard work paid off for Lockett, just like it did for Gaskins, who came to K-State as an unpolished athlete and left as an NFL linebacker. Now, he's enjoying his rewards. He wouldn't reveal the details of his three-year contract, but he did say he enjoys driving around in his 1997 Toyota 4-Runner.

Although he also said he won't let the glamour of the league get to him. "If we want to, we can live the high life. It's there for all of us," he said. "But was never like that, like Deion (Sanders) or something "I'm from a small town down by Daytona Beach, Fla., and I'll stick to the rivers and streams I come from. In order to survive in the NFL, to make a career out of this, you have to concentrate on football 100 percent of the time.'

And so far, it appears that he's on the way to making a career out of it.

"He has a long career ahead of him in the NFL," Bunting said. "Not only is he a hard worker, but he has a great attitude. He's already a premier specialteams player, and he'll be starting in our nickel package."

Still, despite the praise, Gaskins won't take anything for granted.

"I'm just happy and blessed to be in the NFL," he said. "I'd do it for free."

Most college students can eat Mexican and frozen TV dinners when a craving arises, but Jason Christiensen isn't like most college stu-

Christiensen, 22, would have been a senior in kinesiology this fall, but he was diagnosed with primary pulmonary hypertension, a rare lung disorder, in May.

"I was used to eating frozen food in college. Now I've got to get used to eating health food," Jason said. He is on a lowsodium diet and can only eat health foods.

Switching to health food isn't the only challenge Jason must overcome. He must raise $234,000 for a double-lung transplant, take expensive medications and rely on liquid oxygen.

PPH occurs in about two persons per million population, and the majority are usually females. The potentially life-threatening condition causes the pulmonaryartery pressure to rise above normal levels.

Jason's symptoms include shortness of breath with minimal exertion, fatigue, dizzy spells and fainting. There is no known cause and no cure, but two types of drugs may help sustain him while he waits for a lung

Although lung transplants have become more common, the waiting list is 12-18 months. The main criteria for a match are the size of the lungs and proper blood match.

Jason began to experience shortness of breath when he was in track at Cloud County Community Junior College in

In high school, he won state in the long jump and triple long jump. He participated in the same events at CCCC. He struggled with shortness of breath, but blamed it on being out of shape.

When Jason became sick this spring, he couldn't even make it around Aggieville or do daily tasks.

"I couldn't carry a load of laundry downstairs," Jason said. "I had to catch my breath and wait five to 10 minutes just to make the second trip."

In mid-April, he thought he had the flu, so he went to Lafene Health Center where he was treated for asthma and bronchitis. He was given an inhaler, but it didn't help.

He said his trek from the West Stadium parking lot to Fairchild Hall for his philosophy class became a tremendous burden. He had to rest at the K-State Student Union before reaching class.

He knew he was still sick, so he went to Manhattan Medical Center where chest Xrays were taken, and he was diagnosed with pneumonia. He missed his classes while he rested at home

World-champion bullrider carries K-State ties as former president of rodeo club.

RIDING THE BULLS

JEFF PALMER

A world-champion bullrider participated in this weekend's Kaw Valley Rodeo, and gained a bit of local flavor.

Raymond Wessel, a member of the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association, was president of the K-State Rodeo Club in 1986.

"K-State had a good rodeo program when I was here, and I assume it's still good. More than a good rodeo club, I got a good education, which is what I came here for," Wessel said.

Wessel graduated from K-State in 1987 with a bachelor's degree in agriculture education. During his time at K-State, Wessel represented the University at the 1986 College National Finals.

Wessel said when he was growing up, he lived on a ranch, and horses always interested him.

Wessel began riding horses at a young age, but didn't start riding bulls until his sophomore year at Pratt County Community College. He's been riding them ever since.

Wessel is one of the top bullriders year in and year out, and he said he plans on being on top for years to come.

"I still have that desire and that need to compete. If you don't have that need or that desire, then it's time to quit, and I'll know when it's time," he said.

Wessel said one tough part of being a cowboy and riding bulls is that long hours are spent on the road.

Barely in a city long enough to stay overnight, Wessel said many nights are spent sleeping in the back of the camper while traveling to the next rodeo. He said traveling from one city to the next is the most expensive part of being a cowboy.

Some guys fly from city to city. That's expensive. This is definitely a full-time job, but it's a job spent on the road," Wessel said.

A part of bullriding that Wessel said he won't miss is the beating his body takes every time he gets on the back of bull. Wessel said many bullriders have knee and shoulder problems, and he is no different.

Having just returned from his second surgery on the same knee, Wessel has felt first-hand what bullriding can do to a person's body.

In addition to two knee surgeries, Wessel has also had two shoulder surgeries during his career.

Wessel has won many bullriding contests, including the American Royal earlier this year in Kansas City, Mo., and has qualified twice for the National Finals in Las Vegas.

Wessel said he was impressed with Kaw Valley Rodeo and how it was run. "This is a very good rodeo, and for its size, it is better than most," he said. When a bullrider shows up to a rodeo he doesn't know which bull he will be riding until right before the event.

Wessel said the bullriders help each other out by telling each other what a particular bull has tendencies to do. He said that helps bullriders build good relationships with each other.

"When you see the same guys everywhere you go, you try not to aggravate anyone. We all get along pretty well and help each other out," he said.

While Wessel has ridden some of the toughest bulls, he sometimes chooses to stay away from them.

"The toughest bull I ever rode was

K-State Student Union Bookstore to be relocated during renovation

NATE JENKINS

Renovation of the K-State Student Union is scheduled to begin next year, and students can expect relocation of some services that are offered, especially in the K-State Union Bookstore.

Although the exact date renovation will begin on the bookstore isn't certain, Bernard Pitts, director of the Union, said if general-contractor proposals are received by early fall of this year, construction could begin by Pitts said renovation of the foodservices area will begin first, and the Union Bookstore will follow.

"The bulk of the Union's financial support comes from food service and the Bookstore sales, so those are our are main priorities," Pitts said.

The Union enhancement, projected to cost $10.2 million, began with the design phase in December 1996 and is expected to continue through 1999.

During renovation, some services will have to be moved, including the Union Bookstore. "I can't say for sure where we will be relocating some of the Bookstore services right now," Kay Farley, director of the Union Bookstore, said. "We are still looking for satellite services to serve the campus."

Farley said relocating parts of the Union Bookstore won't affect its ability to do business and help people prepare for classes.

However, there will be less merchandising during renovation, so Farley said students should take advantage of the Union Bookstore's pre-order pro-

The program allows students to order their books with a $5 deposi tas soon as they are enrolled in classes. Textbook sales and ordering will remain in the upstairs of the Union Bookstore.

After renovation is completed,

Farley said she hopes the Union Bookstore will be a more comfortable and convenient place for students.

The renovated store will have a reading area for patrons to use, and all the cash registers will be on the store's lower level.

The copy center will be moved next to the store, and the bank and ID-card center will be closer as well.

Computer sales will also be moved from the Union Bookstore to a facility that hasn't been determined yet.

"We will have to be flexible during renovation, but I think people will really like what is going to be done with the store," Farley said.

Man convicted of captial murder could face death

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Kan. - Gary Kleypas, convicted of killing a fellow Pittsburg State University student, is the first person to face a possible death sentence in state court since 1994. Jurors deliberated a little more than two days before finding Kleypas guilty Friday of capital murder in the stabbing of Carrie A. Williams, 20, in her home March 30, 1996. She lived two doors away from Kleypas. State District Judge Donald Noland set the penalty phase of the trial to begin Tuesday. A court spokesman said it was expected to last about five

"The first step of justice has been served," said Janie Williams, accompanied by her husband, Larry Williams, who wept as the statement was read. Carrie Williams' brother, Seth Williams, and sister, Julie Mattox, also stood with their parents outside the courthouse.

Union associate director set to retire on Aug. 1

AARON BRUNGARDT

K-State has undergone many changes during the past 35

Jack Sills, senior associate director of the K-State Student Union, has helped bring some of those changes about, but he is leaving K-State.

Sills is retiring Aug. 1 after working for the University for more than three decades.

Sills said one drastic change is the growth of the student

'There has been much growth at K-State," he said. There were only 8,000 students enrolled when I first got Sills said K-State's services have expanded in his time here. The University has added Dole Hall, McCain Auditorium and a Salina campus.

During Sills' tenure at K-State, the Union has expanded and changed as well. The Union was built in 1956 and underwent an addition in 1962, the year Sills came to K-State to work as an accountant for the Union. The K-State Union Bookstore was added when the third addition came in 1970. Before then, there were two stores in that location. One sold paper back-books, and the other sold office materials. Sills said students could only purchase textbooks at two different locations in Aggieville before the expansion. Sills lead the way to make the Union a comfortable atmosphere for the students, Jack Connaughton, associate director of the Union, said. "He was instrumental in making the Union a smoke-free environment in 1987," Connaughton said.

"It wasn't too long after the Union that all the other unions in our conference became smoke free, too," he said. Within the last few years, the Union added a Subway restaurant in the recreation area, breaking a long-lasting tradition of owning all parts of the Union. Jack Thoman, assistant director of the Union, said Sills was attentive to students needs.

"He was always being a good listener to the student government's concerns," Thoman said. The Union is going under construction again next year, but Sills won't be working for the University then. He said he has other plans in mind "Traveling is the first thing on the agenda," Sills said.

Dilly's Deli to close; bagel business to take its place

Dilly's Deli will close at 2 p.m. today after serving the Manhattan community since December 1993. A new store, New York Bagel Shop, will take Dilly's spot in four to six weeks.

The deli will serve a limited menu until it closes.

Employees of Dilly's gathered at the store Sunday to clean up and remove fixtures.

They said they knew owner Donald Klaassen, who was unavailable for comment, was thinking of selling the store, but they didn't find out about the New York Bagel Shop purchase until a week ago.

"It could be a good change for Manhattan," Noah Diehl, employee, said.

Dilly's Deli primarily sold sandwiches and soup, and employees said they anticipate the new store will have products along the same line.

"It's between fast food and a sit-down place," Diehl said.

Employees agreed the atmosphere is what made Dilly's Deli special.

A slow Sunday afternoon allowed 12 of the Deli staff to gather to collect their final pay checks. The absence of hungry customers made the gathering seem like a going-away

"The atmosphere and the people were laidback," Willie Scalletti, employee, said.

Employees said they expect to keep their jobs despite the change in ownership.

Tina Wear, manager of the store, has not received word about store changes. Wear said she was unfamiliar with New York Bagel Shop, which is from Wichita.

Guards quell short-lived Arkansas prison riot

WRIGHTSVILLE, Ark. - A handful of inmates briefly took over part of a mediumsecurity prison, attacking guards trying to search a prisoner for drugs. They meekly gave up about four hours later.

There were no reports of injuries, though some windows had been broken. All prison workers were accounted for and no one had been held hostage.

Prison officials said 12 to 15 inmates seized control of two 50-bed barracks at the Wrightsville Unit, a work farm for 600 inmates about 20 miles south of Little Rock. The barracks hold 96 inmates.

The disturbance began late Saturday when an inmate facing a drug search jumped two guards, Tyler said. One guard tried to spray the prisoner with pepper spray, but other inmates attacked

About 2 1/2 hours into the standoff, prison officials told the inmates they would storm the barracks to regain control. The prison's other 500 inmates slept through the disturbance.

The mother of David Kenneth Hickock talked to her son by telephone shortly before arriving home Friday afternoon and finding him hanging in the bathroom, Elk County Sheriff Janet Harrington said.

Jane Hickock immediately called authorities and tried to revive her son with CPR, the sheriff said. The boy was taken to Mercy Hospital in Independence where he was pronounced dead about half an hour after he was found.

The sheriff ruled the death accidental, saying there were no signs of suicide. Harrington declined to release further information about how the boy hanged himself because she said other children might try it.

2 Mexicans charged with running deaf-peddling ring

CHICAGO — Two deaf illegal aliens from Mexico were arrested and charged with conspiring to smuggle deaf Mexicans into the United States and forcing them to sell $1 key chains and other trinkets in Chicago.

The defendants, arrested Friday and Saturday, are linked to a similar operation in New York, Immigration and Naturalization Service spokesman Russ Bergeron said

Investigators said the deaf were selling more than $1 million a year in trinkets in New York and Illinois. A similar operation was uncovered on Friday in Sanford, N.C.

Unlike deaf Mexicans forced into virtual slavery in New York, the Mexicans in Chicago were living in humane conditions, according to federal investigators. Ten were taken into protective custody and one, accused in an administrative complaint with being an illegal alien, was detained.

Those arrested were Norma Alcantera and Francisco Duemas, both charged with conspiring to smuggle, harbor and conceal illegal aliens. They were arrested on a federal warrant from New York, where they will be sent for

Floods push Oder River to record high; Poland orders evacuations

FRANKFURT AN DER ODER, Germany -Floodwaters that broke through a dike and submerged villages last week poured back into the swollen Oder River on Sunday, raising levels downstream to record highs and forcing evacuations.

Officials ordered the 17,000 people in the Polish border city of Slubice to evacuate again for fear the river would break through the dike.

To the north, about 15,000 people on the German side were told to be ready to leave at a moment's notice.

The north-flowing Oder, which forms a natural border between Poland and Germany, started flooding about three weeks ago after heavy rains in Poland and the Czech Republic.

In Poland, officials feared their dike would not hold and ordered residents to leave. Some people had just returned to their homes after being ordered to evacuate last weekend because of the first wave of flooding.

fter 38 years, Rick Young still enjoys the abuse of getting tossed by a 2,000 pound bull. "Very few people have jobs that they like," he said.

Young, 63, attended Louisiana State University and majored in pre-veterinary medicine for 2 1/2 years.

During his time there, he played football and basketball and was all-state in both sports.

Young graduated with a degree in animal husbandry at South Eastern Louisiana University, where he got his first taste of rodeo.

"I got introduced to riding bareback and loved it ever since," he said.

One day when he was participating in a rodeo, he was asked to fill in a clown spot. When he performed his comedy act, a producer asked him if he'd like to join the tour.

"He asked me if I'd like to do a few shows," Young, nicknamed the "Ragin' Cajun," said. "I told him I want to do all the shows or none at all."

At that time, he was involved with rodeos as a participant and a rodeo clown.

"Once I joined the Pro Rodeo and Cowboy Association, I had to quit riding because they didn't want me to injure myself from riding," he said. Young fought bulls to keep them away from the cowboys, but then he became a barrel clown. He said he didn't know at the time that it's actually more dangerous being a barrel clown.

"The bulls will dig their horns in that barrel, and you're just stuck there hoping they won't snag you."

But sometimes hope isn't enough, when it comes to being a rodeo clown. Young has had many different kinds of injuries. "I went a year with a broken leg," he said. "You have to work hurt, though. If you don't, you don't get paid."

He also had a broken nose from a bull trapping him inside a bar-

Otherwise, next year could cost even more. Universities could begin depending on or expecting Big 12 money.

o is Seth Childs Road done yet or not? I'm not sure, and I'm in no hurry to hop on and find out. Driving through construction doesn't bring out the best side of me. The safety of everyone else around me drops a notch on my priority scale while I'm doing my best to weave through the fields of orange barrels without losing paint or bumpers or passengers. Even on the interstate, that always-maintenanced automotive circulatory system of the Midwest, there are a few spots in which you are eased from one lane to another in nice, shallow angles. But when you move on Seth Childs, you plunge into the other lane at angles steep enough to make billy goats nauseous.

Right now it's an inconvenience, but it's an inconvenience I can avoid. In the next few weeks, there are going to be students returning in ever-increasing numbers, and some of them may react to construction even worse than me, but not quite like "The Road Warrior."

As a matter of fact, he had it easy. While Mel Gibson was battling post-apocalyptic mutants and assorted terrors of the outback, at least he got to crush, impale and immolate his foes. Sadly, Mad Max tactics won't cut it here in Manhattan, though it may feel like you need to resort to metal-on-metal combat while rumbling down Poyntz Avenue.

As was done with Bluemont Avenue a few weeks ago, Poyntz has been repaved and don't think I'm going to find fault with that. What I am going to find fault with, though, is that I still can't tell where the lanes are. This was an inconvenience on Bluemont, where one doesn't have to cope with parked cars.

On Poyntz, though, you get your choice of hazards. You can either jockey for the left lane, in which case you run the risk of going grill-to-grill with oncoming traffic, or you can squeeze to the right and tickle the rear fenders of the parked cars and pray that nobody decides to back out.

Either way, you could still potentially go Ben-Hur with vehicles in the other lane, sparks flying from clashing hubcaps, bumpers and rear-view mirrors. Is Manhattan ready for such anarchy? I thought not.

Please paint the lanes. Drivers in Manhattan need all the help they can get.

Speaking of help, perhaps someone can give me a hand with this latest nugget of news from K-State Parking Services. Apparently there's been an effort to clarify the stalls and color-code the striping to designate the appropriate areas for each type of permit. Again, this is a fantastic idea, long overdue, and I'm all

My question stems from the lettering used on the permits to designate between certain classifications of permit. A majority of the seven classes make sense: 'D" for Derby Dining Center, "O" for off-campus students, for example.

What I'm wondering is what can of alphabet soup you're playing when you can derive "W" from faculty/staff, "T" from general and "Z" from any permit.

Okay, I'll give "Z" the benefit of the doubt. It's a good wildcard letter, though not as good as "X' (they're probably saving that letter for something exciting on down the road).

Still, I ponder. "W." Faculty/staff. I keep making a 'wuh" sound in the hopes that it leads to something even tangentially connected to either faculty or staff. Why?" is the closest I can get. Maybe it's short for 'work" as in "these people work here" (and I'll let you deal with the possible implication that the student body's primary function is to drink beer and consume

That brings us to "T." "Try again" bounces to mind. Is it too much to ask that there be mnemonics for these abbreviations? The rationale for these changes was to eliminate or, at least, reduce confusion about where one is allowed to park. These abbreviations don't help in the slightest. What, was there a sale on these letters or something?

If you have any insights into the origin of these cryptic codes or if you happen to find a parking permit Rosetta stone, let me know.

We'll see you next month, and until then, drive with I'll probably be in the other lane.

MEDIA RIDDLED WITH GAY STEREOTYPES

Editor,

A recent article by the Associated Press noted that the Andrew Cunanan press coverage was loaded with all the stereotypes of gay men - sexual promiscuity, lavish parties, violence, cross-dressing, drugs, bars, bath houses and talk of AIDS.

It's important for the public to know that Cunanan represented the seedier side of gay life, not the norm.

The gay individuals and couples I know lead quiet lives in ordinary neighborhoods. I am a 43-year-old gay man who has been in a loving, monogamous relationship for 21 years. We lead an everyday life as any married couple. We pay our taxes and obey the speed limit. Neither of us has ever partied in South Beach, been to a bath house, been sexually promiscuous, taken illegal drugs, cross-dressed or has AIDS. We can say this about the gay friends we socialize with, too.

We've been to out to gay bars once in a while (the last time was about 2 years ago) but find the music too loud and the air too smoky. There's nothing weird about gay bars, though. They're just like other bars or dance clubs.

The TV evangelists and anti-gay activists portray all gays as negatively as possible, but people need to realize the truth. Cunanan had as much in common with ordinary, everyday, decent gay Americans as a man from

In the past several months, many murders have been committed. The United States has an extremely high murder rate among industrialized countries.

There are law enforcement personnel all over the country tracking down suspects for these various murders, yet outside area media, we never hear anything about it.

FBI homicide investigators have said Andrew Cunanan killed several people, including designer Gianni Versace.

Cunanan, although he is now dead, has had his picture on every news program and every newspaper, and he even made the cover of the July 28 issue of Newsweek.

I disagree with the media making such a big deal about this accused serial killer. Yes, from what I have seen on television and read in print, the FBI is on the right track. The media shouldn't notice Cunanan only now. Why not as soon as investigators have a suspect? Cunanan has been on the FBI's 10-most-wanted list since May, when a cemetery caretaker in New Jersey was killed. Why was there no national media coverage then? Cunanan was on the 10-most-wanted list, but not until he was a suspect in the slaying of someone of notoriety was his picture flashed everywhere.

Newsweek, which typically is a good news magazine, decided to dedicate 20 pages to stories about Cunanan and Versace. Well, what about other killers who are out there? The media should concentrate more on other things of importance in the world rather than make an accused murderer the spotlight.

Sure, Cunanan may have killed several people, but there are other people out there who have been murdered and other serial killers who are still at large. I would bet there are even more dangerous killers out there who will continue to kill. But it seems that they will never have their picture on the evening news being wanted persons.

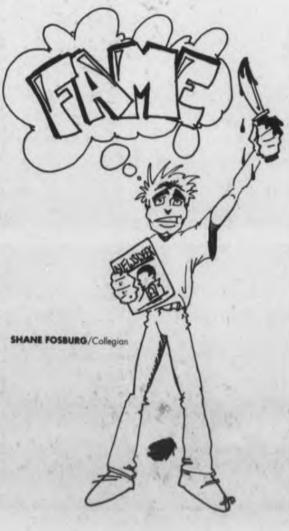

Newsweek published an in-depth story about Cunanan's past. They also wrote about Versace, but what about the other murder victims? They will probably soon be forgotten, along with other murder victims and other killers. Cunanan became famous, or maybe just infamous, because he was accused of killing someone the media considered worthy of cov-

He played in the Shrine Bowl on Saturday, although he didn't rack up

He only had two tackles, but the East squad ran most of its plays away from Beisel's side of the field. However, one of those tackles, his last ever as a high-school player, was a sack of East quarterback Matt Karleskint for a 15-yard loss.

On the play, Beisel appeared to get to Karleskint with ease, wrapping him up quickly and dropping him without giving him a chance to get rid of the ball.

'I think he's got a lot of potential," said Wes Walker, who played with Beisel on the West squad in the Shrine Bowl. "He's going to be one of the best defensive ends in Division I. He has no limits as to what he can do. The only limits he has is how he limits himself."

Now that the Shrine Bowl and his high-school playing days - are over, he's looking forward to playing with

But he's taking a little vacation now, while

"I'm just going home and resting for a couple of weeks until we have to come back on Aug. 8 and get it going," he said.

When he gets back to Manhattan, he'll try to earn playing time as a true freshman this year. "I'm not planning on redshirting," he said. "But if that's what the coaches want, I'll be glad to do it.' Beisel will be fighting for a spot as a defensive end, and he said he hopes to step up to firststring on the depth chart.

They like my speed and quickness, and I'm the prototype size for a defensive end in K-State's system," he said. "One end slot is pretty much locked up with Darren Howard, but as for the other spot, it's going to go to whoever works for it and whoever wants it the most."

Beisel wants the spot. He's always had a starting role on his football team, dating back to his fresh-

He said he's excited about wearing the K-State uniform, and he's also looking forward to playing the teams on the Wildcats' schedule. After three quick games against Mid-American Conference teams, K-State heads up to Nebraska for a showdown with the Cornhuskers on Oct. 4.

That's a step up for Beisel, who spent the past four seasons playing against high-school teams.

"I've never been to Lincoln for a game, but I've always wanted to go up there. I guess I'll be in pads, though," he said. "I can't wait to go. I can't wait to walk in there and crap my pants."

While K-State managed to sell more than 40,000 tickets to the Cotton Bowl, other Big 12 schools faced poor ticket sales. Months later, after a decision to assist those schools financially, answers about budget questions trickle out.

The Dallas

The Dallas Morning News has reported that the universities of Colorado, Texas and Nebraska had more to blame than poor ticket sales for their respective bowlgame budget deficits of $163,413, $314,405 and $890,000.

All three teams reported losses in the form of unsold tickets the bowl committees required them to sell and turned to other Big 12 schools for help.

Each of the three schools had received more than $1 million in allowances from the conference, but none were able to stay within

The Big 12 agreed to collectively pay 70 percent of the three schools' losses. K-State's athletic department paid close to $85,000, Max Urick, athletic director, said.

Urick said the low ticket sales were the main reason why the majority of the conference athletic directors agreed to reimburse the three schools. Nebraska sold only 3,589 of the 15,000 tickets the Orange Bowl required them to sell. It paid the bowl $915,085 for its trouble.

The Morning News report shows, however, that the box office wasn't the only reason they took a dive.

Nebraska took all 170 team members to the Orange Bowl in Miami, spending $331,361 on charter flights for team, staff and family members. Another $375,203 paid for their hotel rooms at the Sheraton Gateway and Sea View Hotels.

Colorado spent $21,594 on Sony Playstations and $850 on game rentals for team members who went to the Holiday Bowl. Another $20,134 was spent on leather bomber jackets, and $4,892 sent the official party to Disneyland and $4,342 sent the team to Sea World.

Texas paid $251,402 for coaching-staff bonuses, $5,757 for briefcases and $2,045 for towels.

Urick, who was among the minority opposed to bailing the three schools out, said he understood Nebraska's situation. The team's fans had counted on going to the Sugar Bowl, but losses to Arizona State and Texas prevented

About 8,000 people were left holding nonrefundable advance tickets to New Orleans, Urick said,

About the expenses

The information on bowl expenses was obtained from each school in response to state open-records-act requests from The Dallas Morning

At the end of June, the finances were not final. bills have not yet been reported. In addition to gifts to players by the university, which may be $300 per player according to NCAA rules, each bowl may spend $300 per player on gifts.

Professional athletes deserve high salaries

Man, I wish I knew how to play sports. As it is, all I can do is write about them, or so they tell me.

On Friday, Americans showed the world how they value money, and who should bring home the big paychecks.

Green Bay quarterback Brett Favre signed a 6-year deal that will pay him at least $42 million. That's a VIEWPOINT lot of money. That's how much the president of the United States, who earns $250,000 a year, will bring home after 42 4-year terms. That's a really long time.

SAM FELSENFELD is a senior

On the same (sef870)@ksu.edu] day Favre inked his deal, Texas-Rangers catcher Ivan Rodriguez refused to sign a $38-million contract extension. That, too, is a lot of money. That's even more than Mike Tyson earned to eat Evander Holyfield.

NFL training camps, baseball pennant races and Ben Hogan's death weren't the top-sports stories of the day. Instead, it was the money stuff.

My drinking buddies tried to tell me athletes are overpaid.

Wrong. We're paying athletes exactly what they deserve, and we're paying them exactly what we want them to earn. Of course, this is only my opinion, but I'm a pretty smart guy, and I've never been wrong before.

Sure, Favre seems to be earning more than the average American, but he deserves it.

If he doesn't sign the contract, and if football players earn $30,000 a year like the rest of us, the only people profiting will be billionaire owners. That's a 1990s version of slavery.

Of course, the standard argument is that if the players earned what us working stiffs consider to be normal salaries, ticket prices would be lower.

The pricing systems, have nothing to do with players' salaries. They are based solely on supply-and-demand. If tickets cost $1, every game would sell out. If tickets cost $2, every game would sell out. So why sell them for just $17 Owners, with a little help from their accountants and economists, have figured out they can charge $30 a seat and fill the stands Sunday after Sunday. So why in the name of capitalism charge only $29?

It's supply-and-demand. Supply is 70,000 seats a game, and demand is astronomical. It's our fault for generating so much revenue. We're the ones going to the games, watching them on television and reading about them in the paper.

As the system works now, players' salaries depend on the size of the revenue pool. About 95 percent of revenue in the NFL comes from gate receipts and television contracts.

Without the players, not a lot of tickets would be sold, and not a lot of people would tune into Fox's game-of-the-week and watch the commercials. The players know this, and they want to be justly compensated.

The ticket prices are not based on salaries. Rather, the salaries are based on the ticket prices.

Favre's $42-million deal isn't outrageous, considering the tickets sold and ratings produced. He's spent his entire life training to play football, and that's because we want him to. Sold-out stadiums prove that.

If that's what we want, we have to pay for it. Complain about the $42 million now, but don't forget to tune in during week three when the Packers take on Miami and Favre goes head-to-head with Dan Marino. Don't forget to stay tuned during the commercials. You know you will.

And then there's the case of Rodriguez. He's a great player, but what in the world is he doing turning down a $38-million contract? Answer: he's doing the right thing.

Sure, it seems he's crazy. I know I'd sign just about any contract for $38 million. I'd even sign a 20-year deal with the Collegian for that much. But that's because I know I probably can't earn too much more than that anywhere else.

Rodriguez, on the other hand, is the best catcher in baseball and will wait until the season ends and test the waters. And then he'll sign for $20 million more.

Just look at Greg Maddux, who, in 1992, was offered a $29 million deal during his free-agent season with Chicago. He turned it down, and the Cubs rescinded their offer. Fans everywhere said he was crazy.

Wrong. He moved on to Atlanta, signed for millions more and picked up a World Series ring during the third year of his contract something that wouldn't have happened with the Cubs. Just remember that when Rodriguez leaves Texas this winter. And don't think bitter thoughts when the $42 million man leads the Packers to another Super Bowl.

After all, if you're not lucky enough to get your hands on a $500 ticket, you'll be watching it on television.

Ford pulls off 'Air Force One' with style ver wonder if motion picture studios have started an inside bet to find the best possible president?

Within the last year alone, we've tolerated Jack Nicholson in 'Mars Attacks," James Garner and Jack Lemmon in "My Fellow Americans," Bill Pullman in "Independence Day" and others I've probably forgotten.

Still, to give the devils their due, they might have finally scored a hit with Harrison Ford in "Air Force One." Ford starts the film as President James Marshall delivering a speech in Moscow, where he says the United States will neither tolerate nor negotiate with terrorists. Getting a lukewarm response from his own Cabinet for his sudden policy change, Marshall is considered all talk until ultra-radical Russian terrorists (Gary Oldman) infiltrate and capture the president's personal lane, Air Force One However, during the takeover, the escape pod is launched (sort of reminds you of "Star Wars," doesn't it?), and the bad guys give the president up for having escaped while leaving his wife, daughter and most of the Cabinet aboard. Ah, ha! In fact, Marshall is not only still on the plane, but also fully prepared to rumble as only a former Han Solo can.

Meanwhile, on the ground, the vice president (Glenn Close) must negotiate with the terrorists, who want the release of a jailed Russian dictator (Jurgen Prochnow). As an added incentive, Oldman promises to execute a hostage every half-hour while waiting for an answer. So what follows would be described by Blockbuster Video promos as "a high stakes game of cat-and-mouse where the fate of the free world hangs precariously."

I would simply call it "a really cool evening with President Indiana Jones

"Air Force One" is one of those movies you know was perfected with a fine-tooth comb. Ford obviously leads the cast in every respect while Oldman, Close and numerous others bring up the rear with just as much style. You then should also consider that the director Wolfgang Peterson, fresh from nail-biters like "In The Line of Fire" and "Outbreak," has already handled the type of tense scenes that make up "Air Force One." OK, the team is good, but how's the plot? Believable, actually. Being somewhere in his 50s, Ford can't exactly rip a bad guy's head clean from his shoul-

So if you're still on the fence about seeing "Air Force One" by now, quit screwing around and enjoy it before those "Entertainment Tonight" twits give away all the good parts in 30second sound bites. Rock Hall of Fame provides distinctive memorable experience

LANCE ZIESCH

The world of rock has always been a little different. So, naturally, the house that rock built is a little different too

Cleveland's Rock 'n' Roll Hall of Fame and Museum is a towering, shimmering glass and pipe pyramid located on the shores of Lake Erie.

When tourists walk through the front doors, they know immediately they're not in an ordinary museum - cars are hanging from the ceiling. The cars help set the mood for what's to come.

The museum is a jumbled mixture of records, clothes, ticket stubs and sounds from past ages. It is a collection of memorabilia from every age of rock, but more importantly, it is a scrapbook of our histo-

Tourists can use the touchscreen computer kiosks to listen to their favorite artists, and also to those artists' influences. It seems to be a cross between an audio/video scrapbook and a family tree.

One exhibit features the one-hit wonders of rock and roll. Samples include the Elegants' "Little Star" and Toni Basil's "Mickey." Biographies and pictures hang on the walls, and songs permeate the exhibit through a continually played medley.

Rock is timeless. The music doesn't just belong to the generation that created it - rock belongs to whomever wants to hear it. This was very much illustrated by women singing and dancing to "Mickey." It was also apparent by reactions of others in the museum.

Another man, probably in his late '50s, was jamming to an Elvis album via headphones on one of the museum's touch-screen kiosks. (He was lucky - he found a kiosk that worked.)

"People from all over the world come here, and they all really enjoy it. It's amazing to see the different kinds of people that come here," Meredith Rutledge, a visitor services representative, said.

"They all come together because of the music. It seems like it's a very uniting force. This music has obviously broken down a lot of barriers between people.'

The Sun Records recording studio control room, which was re-created inside the museum, is also a fascinating exhibit. It features the equipment the legendary Sam Phillips used to record Johnny Cash. Jerry Lee Lewis, Elvis Presley and others. Original recordings from some of those sessions lie on a counter in the exhibit. Jerry Lee's "Great Balls of Fire" plays from an overhead speaker.

A temporary exhibit, the first one in the museum's history, is on the Psychedelic Era 1965-69, with the slogan "I want to take you high-

Interesting artifacts in various exhibits include a set of lavendersequined suits from the Four Tops, a pair of John Lennon's wire-rimmed glasses, Life magazines with rock cover stories, unused tickets to Woodstock, a wall-sized album cover from the Beatles' "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band" and Jim Morrison's Boy Scouts of America Cub Scout shirt.

In addition to the cool displays, the museum's Hall of Fame room also deserves recognition.

The darkened room is located at the top of a winding spiral staircase. The room is surrounded on all sides with black glass.

Each of the inductees' names and signatures glow in white. By each name is a black and white TV monitor behind the glass, showing still shots of their faces. It's kind of eerie. The atmosphere is like a chapel. It's the only area of the museum that's quiet.

The museum also has a cinema a cafe and terrace overlooking Lake Erie and a music store and gift shop. Overall, it's a trip tourists should take when in Cleveland, if for no other reason than to look up some old friends.

House adapted to bed and breakfast SERAPHINE NAEYMI

End of a series This is the second in a two-part series on bed and breakfasts in Manhattan.

Another recent addition to the bed and breakfast scene in Manhattan is the Fairchild Inn, located on 17th street across from K-State. The house was formerly the Theta Iota Chapter of the Delta Delta Delta sorority in 1924 and later sold to the Phi Kappa Tau fraternity, who occupied the house from 1931 to 1956.

In the 1970s until 1996, the building housed student apartments. In 1996 Kevin and Kurstin Peirce began to renovate the house in July to turn it into a bed and breakfast.

"We thought we were getting in over our heads, but we managed to do it. Our friends and family are so supportive. They helped us out so much," Kevin said.

The couple said that if people don't take risks in life they'll never know the answer to the question, 'What if?'

Kevin and Kurstin both graduated with degrees in Hotel and Restaurant Management. Kevin is former manager of Harry's Uptown. Kurstin said she went to culinary school in Boston and loves to cook.

She makes a large breakfast for guests that consists of eggs, scones, quiche, fresh fruit, coffee cake and special requests made by guests. The couple works at Rock-A-Belly Deli.

"We moved from Colorado back to Manhattan because we loved it here so much. There is such a huge sense of community here," Kurstin said.

The couple describes the bed and breakfast as a place with the privacy of a hotel and the intimacy of a home. The four rooms have private baths for the convenience of the guests.

The Fairchild Inn has antiques and new furniture. The understated elegance of the house allows the guest to feel comfortable.

cated to Kansas' state flower. The room is brightly colored in yellow hues and has a private sitting room for reading. The Purple Thistle Room salutes K-State Photographs of the University and the K-State Wildcats adorn the walls. The private bath has a therapeutic spa for guests to relax in.

The Sage Suite's color scheme has cool greens that give the room a soothing effect. A Murphy bed gives the option for four guests to stay in the room. The Sage Suite also has a therapeutic spa.

"We offer our guests sheer comfort and relaxation for a price that competes with other hotels in Manhattan," Kevin said.

Students participate in Business Week

AARON BRUNGARDT

Seventy-two high school students visited K-State last week for Business Week, a program sponsored by the College of Business Administration.

Students had the opportunity to listen to 58 speakers involved with corporate and individual businesses, Richard Burke, executive director of Business Week, said.

"The speakers were so professional and informative. Anyone could learn from them," he said. "One speaker, who is an alumni, came all the way from Dallas to speak to the

The students broke up into seven companies to compete against one another throughout the week. The companies were evaluated by a computer simulator.

"The computer simulator uses business decisions by the groups as input and the output is the computer showing if the decisions are profitable or not," Burke said.

During a graduation ceremony Friday, awards were given to the companies who placed first, second and third in the computer simulation.

Other awards were given to the top three companies with the best invention, marketing, corporate citizenship and the leadership challenge, a mental competition used for team building on the first day.

"The military science ROTC students helped set up the leadership challenge, and each company had to figure out how to solve different obstacles," Burke said.

K-State students were also involved with Business Week. Business honor students served as counselors for the companies. The companies also had business people as advis-

Advisers and counselors were not allowed to make any decisions. They could only answer questions and provide information, Aaron Buster, counselor and senior in marketing, said.

'The advisers and counselors were very helpful," Brandon Kauffman, senior at Hutchinson High School, said. "They bought materials we needed for our companies.'

Buster said K-State student counselors also benefited from the week.

The speakers provoked some thought, and I made some valuable contacts," he said. Burke said high-school participants were not the only people who learned from the week. He said both speakers and advisers gained from the experience.

"Almost every single one of them said they learned more than the students," he said.

When the clinic called him back in, he said he knew something was wrong. "I could tell from the look on their faces," Jason said. He was told he had an enlarged heart. During the next few weeks, Jason was examined by doctors in Manhattan and Topeka. He was diagnosed with PPH by a Topeka cardiologist who referred him to Barnes Jewish Hospital in St. Louis, which performs about 48 lung transplants annually.

While at Barnes, Jason was examined, educated about his disorder and told his options.

Since being diagnosed, he has gone back to try a drug, but the calcium channel-block medication, which was administered hourly, did not work.

"I was so frustrated, "Jason said. "Why didn't it work?"

Next week, Jason and his parents, Margie and Joe, will drive to Barnes to try the drug Flowlan, the only other treatment for PPH.

He will have a catheter implanted in his chest. A pump, worn around his waist, will transfer medication to the catheter and deliver Flowlan to his heart

"If it works, it can put off a lung transplant for a while," Margie said. "I hope it will work for him. This drug is usually successful."

Flowlan costs $15,000 per month, but the family's health insurance won't pay for it. Because there are no lungtransplant centers in Kansas and Kansas Medicaid does not cover the cost of treatments outside the state, Jason has filed an appeal to Medicaid to request Jason said the idea of a transplant is overwhelming.

"It will be very stressful," he said. Jason's mother said he will have to live in St. Louis four months prior to the time doctors think he will receive lungs. Transplantation must take place within a few hours from the time the lungs are Jason would also need to stay in St. Louis for four months after the transplant so the medical specialists can monitor his progress. After his transplant, he will have to take anti-rejection medication the rest of his life.

Trinity Lutheran Church, Jason's church, will have an ice-cream social to raise funds for Jason at 7 p.m. Thursday at the Municipal Band Concert in Abilene.

Nelson, senior in criminology, said Jason seems to be taking it well.

"Imagine yourself in his shoes, wondering if today is your last day," he said. "Jason is an all-around nice guy. He is one of those guys who can walk up to and talk to strangers."

Jason said he has searched his soul for an answer to his dilemma.

"I thought maybe I caused it," Jason said. "You search yourself spiritually. You come closer to God."

His pastor, Frank Pekarek, said he is proud to be Jason's friend.

"Attitude makes a big difference," Pekarek said. "Jason's attitude is good. Things like this teach us humility and patience."

High-school students from across the nation gathered at K-State for the 17thannual Flint Hills Publications Workshop last week.

Students worked on projects ranging from producing their own newspaper to making a 10-minute video about the workshop. Most of the projects proceeded without any interruptions, Linda Puntney, executive director of the Journalism Education Association, said.

"The server crashed in the newsroom," Puntney said.

New hotel to be completed by spring

► The editorial
The Collegian editorial board discusses how hotels can cause economic growth in Manhattan.

Completion of Kansas Highway 177 is bringing more than just travelers to Manhattan.

Ferguson Properties, of Liberty, Mo., announced the addition of the Fairfield Inn by Marriott to Manhattan.

"Fairfield Inn is the number one choice of business travelers in the United States," Joe Knopp, a counselor for the development, said.

The hotel would add 98 guest rooms to the existing 699 hotel and motel rooms in Manhattan, according to the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce.

Features of the hotel will include an indoor swimming pool, an exercise room and a meeting room with a capacity of 60 people.

The multimillion-dollar project had a ground-breaking ceremony July 25 in a lot at the corner of Third and Colorado streets. Construction of the hotel is expected to be completed March 1, 1998, Knopp said.

Location for the hotel is excellent for the travelers coming into Manhattan from the south and east, he said

Development of the hotel could aid development of land south of the mall, Knopp said. "The whole area is ripe for redevelopment now," he said. Restaurants, commercial and retail businesses could be encouraged to develop if a quality building to house the hotel is constructed, Knopp

Knopp said hotel development in Manhattan has been low in the last five years.

Some Manhattan hotel and motel managers said existing businesses have been running under 60 percent capacity in Manhattan.

Business during the weekends K-State football has home games is busy, but the rest of the year, many hotels and motels do not be run close to capacity, Henry Naber, Holiday Inn &

Holidome general manger, said.

"It's not every weekend, its certain weekends," Debra Delzeit, manager of Manhattan Super 8 Motel, said about busy weekends such as K-State football home games and Country Stampede.

Limited service hotels and motels will have more competition when the Fairfield Inn is completed, Naber said.

Motels and Hotels like Best Western, Days Inn and Super 8 Motel are more comparable than the Holidome or Ramada Inn, because they provide similar services as the Fairfield Inn, he said.

Delzeit said occupancy in area hotels and motels are low without another chain coming in.

"Most of the hotels don't feel we have that occupancy," she said.

Present area hotels and motels are struggling to fill their businesses. She said the addition of a new facility could run an existing hotel or motel out of business.

Sigma Gamma Rho sorority is celebrating its 75th anniversary this year. A national celebration was held in the founding city of Indianapolis this summer and events are scheduled through out the fall semester at K-State Sigma Gamma Rho was founded in 1922 at Butler

University in Indianapolis. Only one of the seven founder members is still alive today, 97-year-old Vivian Marbury. Marbury was in attendance at this summer's celebration and gave a speech on why they founded the sorority that women are still a part of today.

The Nu Beta chapter of Sigma Gamma Rho was chartered at K-State on October 3, 1992.

While the membership numbers are lower than that of many other sororities on campus (there are currently only two members). the accomplishments of Sigma Gamma Rho do not reflect the low numbers. Sigma Gamma Rho was given an award from the Flint Hills Breadbasket for donating over 10

14 dead after market explosions in Jerusalem

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM - Carefully synchronizing their attacks, two men carried briefcases packed with explosives and nails into the heart of Jerusalem's most crowded outdoor market Wednesday and blew themselves up, sending body parts and blood-soaked vegetables flying.

The double blasts killed 14 people - including the two bombers - and injured more than 150, striking at the teetering Mideast peace process at a time when renewed progress seemed plausible.

Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's Cabinet met in emergency session to suspend peace talks with the Palestinians - which resumed this week after a fourmonth deadlock - until Arafat acts against the militants "with determination," Israel TV said.

A leaflet claiming to be from the militant Islamic group Hamas took responsibility for the blasts, which went off in an alley about 50 yards apart from each other. Mahane Yehuda, Jerusalem's main fruit and vegetable market, was packed with shoppers when the bombs went off at 1:15 p.m.

"People flew in the air without legs, without arms, without clothes," said one witness, 43-year-old Sarah

Soot-covered bodies lay on the ground, their blood mixing with smashed watermelons, torn clothes and shredded newspaper. Green awnings covering the alley were torn apart and vegetable stands and clothing displays overturned; scraps of clothing dangled from telephone lines. The attackers - whose overall aim has been to scuttle the peace process - achieved a short-term goal: President Clinton postponed a new peace initiative by U.S. envoy Dennis Ross, who was to arrive in the region Thursday. No new date for the trip was set. The attacks came just days after Netanyahu appeared on television to highlight his success in pre-predecessors and led to his election last year. Shortly after the bombing, Yasser Arafat called Netanyahu to express his condolences, resulting in what Netanyahu spokesman Shai Bazak termed a venting the deadly suicide bombings that bedeviled his

"tough conversation." Later, at the emergency session of the Israeli Cabinet, Netanyahu said Palestinians' condolences were not enough: "What we expect is action." One senior Israeli official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Israel might resort to commando strikes or limited military offensives in Palestiniancontrolled areas to try to stop the attacks.

Arafat, speaking in the West Bank city of Jericho shortly before declaring a state of emergency, said he "strongly and completely" condemns the violence, which he said "is not only aimed at Israelis but at the Arafat said he hoped Israel would not use the attacks as a pretext for further delays in peace talks, which collapsed in March over Israeli building into disputed territories and Israeli demands for a crackdown on Palestinian militants. Israeli television reported that Arafat was expected to conduct mass arrests of Islamic militants in the West Bank and Gaza late Wednesday.

News reports said the two bombers apparently drove to the market together wearing black coats and white shirts - perhaps in an effort to look like ultra-Orthodox Jews. Each carried a briefcase packed with 22 pounds of explosives, police said.

"I heard the explosions one after another," said 65year-old Simha Kadoori, speaking from a hospital bed after doctors removed a 1-inch black nail lodged in her chest. "I fell (and) saw blood on my chest."

Missing accounted for in Fort Collins; search continues for flood victims

ASSOCIATED PRESS

FORT COLLINS, Colo. - Rescuers who feared they would find more bodies in the wreckage of a neighborhood inundated by a rain-swollen creek got encouraging news Wednesday - everyone who had been reported missing was safe.

Three people who had still been listed as missing Wednesday morning were accounted for by midday. The death toll from Monday night's storms, which sent a wall of water through a neighborhood, smashing houses and mobile homes, stood at five.

It didn't end the search, because authorities wanted to make sure some visitor, whose absence hadn't been noticed, had been swept away. Rescuers used hooks to comb the muddy banks of a swollen creek

"We don't know who might have been visiting, staying the night or been down here to look," said Glenn Levy, battalion chief with the Poudre Fire Authority.

Poudre Fire Authority Battalion Chief Warren Jones had said earlier that he doubted any survivors were left in the debris of two mobile home parks in this city of 108,000 about 60 miles north of Meanwhile, authorities today evacuated a small farming community east of Fort Collins after a thunderstorm forced water out of an irrigation canal, leaving a foot of water across the town. Authorities said the evacuation of Weldona was ordered because of health concerns and the potential for area dams to break.

The town of about 120 residents has only a few businesses, a school and a In Fort Collins, skies were overcast today. The forecast called for more rain to hit this afternoon, and officials couldn't rule out the possibility of more flooding. "It's going to need watching," National Weather Service forecaster Todd Dankers said. Ian Leverette said he watched the water rise around his mobile home, and he and his daughter were tossed about when their trailer was wrenched from its

"It wedged up between two trees and tilted sideways," he said. "It was the scariest thing I've ever experienced."

Leverette and his daughter climbed out a window and waited about 90 minutes before being picked up in a boat.

When Christina Wilson-Silerio last saw her aunt, she was being swept down the normally tranquil Spring Creek, which had turned into a 15-foot wide, fast-moving river.

"Where my aunt is, that's all I can think about now," Wilson-Silerio said. baby girls. Then she just let go. The current took my aunt away." Her aunt was later found dead.

'My cousin was holding her and three More than 8 inches of rain fell on Fort Collins in 12 hours Monday, causing water to pool up to 20 feet deep behind a railroad track bed. When the water began rushing over the top of the track bed, it quickly eroded the earthen embankment, and a wall of water 10 to 20 feet high rushed through two trailer parks. At least 40 people were injured.

'There was no time for warning," said police Lt. Brad Hurst.

Rescuers spent much of the day searching, dragging huge hooks through the water and sending divers into the dark creek. Dogs tried to pick up the scent of survivors, and rescuers searched each of 90 trailers that were swamped. They spray-painted what they found on each trailer. Many said "Clear," but one was marked "Live Cat."

Five bodies were found, all women. Gov. Roy Romer, who lived in the neighborhood when he attended Colorado State University, surveyed the destruction and talked to victims. "It just catches your breath when you see that amount of damage," Romer said.

On the university campus, 4 feet of water poured through the student center. Floodwaters ruined band uniforms, sheet music, pianos and other instruments stored in a basement. At the library, an estimated 1 million volumes got wet and century-old newspapers were destroyed. Damage on campus was estimated at $40 million. The disaster hit just days before the 21st anniversary of the Big Thompson River flood, which killed 145 people about 20 miles southwest of Fort Collins.

Fire from hot coals causes more than $7000 in damage

A fire caused more than $7,000 worth of damage Tuesday because a family left hot coals burning next to a shed behind the Capitol Federal Savings & Loan building on 14th and Houston streets. Chuck Tannehill, assistant director for the fire department, said hot coals used for a barbecue during the day were dumped next to the shed containing 50 small bottles of propane

While Tannehill said it's not a criminal act to dump coals, civil action may be taken against the owner of the property, Kyle A. Junghanns.

"This wasn't an act of willful intent, but more an act of stupidity," he said.

Tannehill said because there were propane tanks in the shed, fire fighters took extra precautions to make sure the fire was completely out before leaving.

"We were there for an extended period of time because you don't want to put the fire out because the propane could keep burning and one more small spark could cause an explosion," he said. Tannehill said there is a difference between putting a fire out and having it under control.

"We had this fire under control early, but couldn't put it out because of the propane tanks," he said. People just need to be careful where they dump things that could cause damage or start a fire.'

There was $3,500 worth of damage to the contents within the shed, including the propane bottles and $1,500 worth of damage to the structure itself.

The shed completely burned down, and there was damage to the surrounding area.

An automobile parked near the shed also suffered $2,500 worth of damage. A building near the shed and a tree next to the shed were damaged as well.

'Sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll' leads to Texas death chamber HUNTSVILLE. Texas - A convicted killer blamed a life of "sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll" for a killing that sent him to the death chamber.

Robert West, 35, a twice-convicted thief who had been in and out of jail since he was 15, was executed by injection Tuesday evening for the 1982 murder of Deanna Klaus, 22, of Houston

It was the 25th execution this year in Texas, extending a record for the nation's most active capital punishment state.

The execution came a few hours after the U.S. Supreme Court refused to consider an appeal and after a federal court rejected a civil rights lawsuit.

Klaus, who lived in a hotel one floor below West, was fatally beaten and stabbed Aug. 24, 1982

West confessed at his trial, saying he killed her because he thought she was helping a vengeance-seeking man West had robbed and attacked while working the streets with a transvestite prostitute.

OKLAHOMA CITY — Two 13-year-olds repeatedly tossed their 3-year-old brother into a swimming pool, knowing he couldn't stay afloat, authorities said as they charged the pair with murder

Prosecutors charged Deangelo's brother, Vernon Leroy James Jr., and their common-law stepbrother, Justin O'Neil Kennedy, with first-degree murder Tuesday.

Witnesses - including an 11-year-old who unsuccessfully tried to save the boy — told police the boys repeatedly threw the child into the deep end of the pool at the Williams Square Apartment complex, even though they knew he could not swim, court records show.

The pool was closed at the time; the boys had apparently

Officials raise alarm as top of dike begins to crumber

BAD FREIENWALDE, Germany - Military helicopters dropped sandbags from the air and tolling church bells urged residents to flee an area on the Oder River where a stretch of 250-year-old earthen dike began crumbling Wednesday.

Authorities sounded the alarm when the sodden dike started crumbling along a stretch of about 165 feet. Soldiers began evacuating the several hundred remaining residents

Emergency workers said there was little chance the rescuers would be able to plug the widening gap in the base of the dike. Authorities said a second dike could help contain the water if the main barrier collapsed.

The Praire preserve is open seven days a week from dawn until dusk.

Lavish grasslands, wild animals, golden sunrises and winding trails give Konza Prairie Research Natural Area its allure.

Managed by the Division of Biology at K-State, the prairie is given special care by the faculty, researchers and students.

David Hartnett, professor of biology and director of the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area, has conducted research at the prairie for 12 years. He has been the director for more than two years.

"Along with teaching, I do research at Konza and coordinate research and educational activities. Management is also a big part of my job," he said.

There are 130 researchers at Konza Prairie. Half of the researchers are from K-State. Other researchers come from across the country to study at the facility

The K-State horse research and teaching program will benefit from a trail ride at the Z-Bar ranch Aug. 2.

The trail ride, sponsored by the American Quarter Horse Association, is one of the 50 trail rides in 40 states as part of Ride '97.

Half of the proceeds from the ride will go to the K-State horse unit and judging team and the remainder benefits therapeutic riding, equine health research and other AQHA programs.

Anyone can participate in the trail

Participants do not have to be an AOHA member and can ride any type of

"You can ride a tricycle if you want," Randel Raub, organizing committee member, said.

To participate in the ride, a registration fee of $125 must be paid, 40 percent of which is tax deductible as a donation.

This fee includes the ride and a meal catered by the Grand Central Hotel in Cottonwood Falls.

Raub said 25 people are preregistered, but organizers were hoping for attendance of at least 100, although 200 would be welcome.

The day's activities also include a silent and live auction.

The live auction features western artwork, a commemorative belt buckle and other western fare while the silent auction showcases things like tack, feed and western jewelry and a certificate for a night's stay at the Grand Central Hotel.

Two different trail rides are offered. One ride is six miles and the other is 12. "The trail loops back for those who are prone to saddle sores," Raub said. The ride will start at 9 a.m., and the meal will be served at 5:30 p.m. The live auction will begin at 6:30 p.m., while bidding on the silent auction will continue through the day.

Raub also said the Z-Bar ranch will be open for tours in the evening.

State coordinator Barb Robel said she is excited about the ride because this is the first time Z-Bar has been open for

"Hopefully we'll have a successful first year to build on," Robel said.

Death of children affects everyone

She could see nothing. Her eyes were closed as she slept comfortably in the surrounding warmth. She lifted her thumb to her mouth and sucked serenely. She rolled over slowly, enjoying the comfort of her silent home. Suddenly, there was a light. It seemed to come from near her feet, but she could not be sure. The air around her was becoming greatly agitated. She felt something pulling violently on her leg. Her face twisted in pain. She silently screamed as her leg was twisted from her body. The thing gripped her at her waist as she lost consciousness Her mouth gaped wide, as quickly she

One can not be on the wrong side of abortion and the right side of God at the same time. Biblical precedent precludes it. Throughout the Bible, God's love for children - born and unborn alike - is

The book of Psalms speaks of how God "knew you in your mother's womb," and how he "knit you together" inside of her. Therefore, in the eyes of the Lord - if not the eyes of the state - abortion is murder. The facts are incontrovertible.

However, in recent years it has become very clear that many Americans, and a growing number of Christians, do not hold to

SHANE FOSBURG/Collect

Mary by e-mail at (mojo@ksu.edu).

Why is it so hard to look at a pregnant woman and see not one life, but two?

In the years since the 1973 Roe v. Wade decision, we have seen a desensitizing of the American psyche to the idea of taking the life of a child. From acceptance to encouragement is a very short road indeed. And it is one that America has passed swiftly down in the last 24 years.

It is no longer simply acceptable to have an abortion — it is encouraged as a form of birth control.

Mother Teresa, in her address to the National Prayer Breakfast, spoke of many people's genuine concern for the children of India and Africa. She spoke of these people's concern for the starvation and hardship that besets these children. She then went on to

"Many people are also concerned about United States. These concerns are very good. But often these same people are not concerned with the millions who are being killed by deliberate decisions of their own mothers."

I could not say it any more clearly. Too often, those who are genuinely concerned for the lives of the born child are not moved by the plight of the unborn.

Those who campaign against abortion are the wrong side of abortion. No wonder so not necessarily absolved of blame. For far too long, debate has been so heated that the real issues are forgotten. Granted, the life of the child far surpasses all other issues. But, also of importance are the lives of the mother and the father of the child. How does abortion affect their lives?

For the mother, it conditions her not to love, but to taking whatever means necessary to solve her "problem." And the father is shown that he does not have to take responsibility for this child that he created. As such he is very likely to put another woman in the same position. If taking personal responsibility for your actions is not emphasized, the problem perpetuates itself. In other words,

Also in her address to the Prayer eakfast Mother Teresa said "So the mother who is thinking of abortion should be helped to love - to give until it hurts her plans, or her free time, to respect the life of the child. The father of that child ... must also give until it hurts."

Teach them to love. Teach them to give.

No wonder so many of us come down on testing centers. No wonder so many of us do nothing.

No wonder so many babies die. We do not know how to really love. We do not know how to really give.

One may ask, "What is the solution?" I say, loving, giving and - in the case of the mother who simply can not afford to have a child, or who can not imagine raising one -

With so many parents who desperately want a child, is it too much to ask that they be given some of the unwanted ones? And it is a myth to think that there would be no home for children born with what some would term abnormalities I would call those who love Jesus to rise up with Mother Teresa and say, "Please don't kill the child. I want the child. Please give me the child." Mother Teresa's children's home in Calcutta has saved 3,000 children from abortions by placing them with loving families. If American churches would take their places alongside her, there would be many more children's lives saved than by all the political maneuverings combined. If we would love - if we would give they would not die.

• EDITORIAL OFF-BASE ABOUT BOWL BUDGET

BAILEY

KEVIN BAILEY is a senior in ele mentary education. You can e-mail

Kevin at (kevinsb@ksu.edu).

Regarding your recent lambasting of other Big 12 football programs. Nebraska's appearance in the Orange Bowl this year earned about $8 million, a substantial chunk of which went to the conference and to K-State athletics.

Both Nebraska and Colorado have been regular participants in bowl games for several years, while K-State got a chunk of their earnings, even in the lean times. I think they've earned some slack. Maybe a little perspective on your part would be in order?

Geography department

• K-STATE SHOULD NOT PAY FOR GREEDY BIG 12 SCHOOLS PLANS

Editor, We should not have to pay for the greed and poor financial management of Nebraska, Colorado and Texas. I'm sure if the shoe was on the other foot this crying trio would not be helping K-State out. Once again, these schools must learn from K-State. We must teach them proper money management and good sportsmanship, something each of them have always lacked. As a banker, I think it would be better if we would loan these schools the money rather then give it to them. And while we're at it, charge 18-percent interest. Make them face up to their financial responsibilities. Once again, K-State has shown everyone who is No. 1 in the Big 12.

Larie Schoap

• FEW REMINDERS NEEDED ABOUT BOWL BUDGET DECISIONS

Editor,

For the second time this summer, the editorial board decided to offer their opinion about the Big 12 helping out financially a few schools that lost money during the bowl season.

I would agree that it seems unfair and that their bowl budgets were excessive, but I think the board needs to be reminded of some

First, K-State is part of the Big 12 and the Big 12 decided to do this. K-State may not agree with the decision, but it is childish to continue to whine about it.

Second, it was not very long ago that K-State was lucky to win a single game. During those many years, K-State survived on the money that the other winning programs earned. That wasn't fair either, but that's the way the conferences are set up.

Chris McNabb graduate student in modern languages dle-aged man is on most women's list of men they would sleep with if given the chance. I know him well. He was always in my parents house when I was a child. He was at the birth of my two children and will be at my wedding. Odds are he was at your house when you were younger. He's not Jesus Christ. He's James Taylor. I guess the two men do have a lot in common. Men wise beyond their years who can wow crowds. Most of my friends can quote more of James Taylor's lyrics than they can from the Bible, and I'm not sure that is a bad thing.

From the time I was very small, James Taylor has been an important part of my life. The first song I remember knowing the words to was "You've Got a Friend." The first time I knew I was in love was when a man held me to the song "Something in the Way She Moves."

I know, it's silly. I swear I am not some strange radical fan. I don't own every single album. I don't write fan letters, and I haven't even considered being a stalker (OK - maybe just once). I have never even been to a concert. I admit I do have a T-shirt, but I don't wear it outside

But my emotional connection to James goes way back. I am not that kind of person, the adoring fan. I am actually the kind of person who makes fun of those adoring fans who live by the lyrics of pop stars. I think Dead Heads are some of the most useless people ever to walk the Earth.

My admiration isn't really my fault. I blame my mother. There were many Sunday mornings when I was younger that my mom would turn off the television (a monumental event in our house) and turn on James while we did our chores. As I grew older it was almost a traumatic thing - anytime I would hear

James I would have horrific flashbacks of being forced into vacuuming and cleaning out the refrigerator for the slave labor wage my parents called an allowance.

It is amazing how just much the sound of his voice reminds me of. The smell of pine cleaner, the feel of warm towels right out of the dryer, the sound of my mom yelling at me for not cleaning that nasty place around the floor next to and still carries on.

For Mary Renee Smith,

it's just a matter of knowing

My children will most likely have this same connection between home and James' music. Sesame Street was their first exposure to James' with a song called "Jelly Man Kelly." The boys and I would sing it together during their baths.

I admit to continuing their addictions by turning up the tunes while I clean house, make dinner or get ready to go somewhere. My younger son, Ethan, sat with me and watched a James Taylor concert aired live on television recently. I know the warm happy feeling of my little boy curled up in my lap and singing along will stay with me forever.

I thought I was unique in my connection with James. I know I'm not.

I am amazed at how many fans there are out there. Fans with the kind of connection and memories I have. Check out the James Taylor Web sites and see how many personal messages are left for James. People have named their children after him. Garth Brooks even named a child after him.

I am just impressed at the power of music, and in particular James Taylor's music, that has such an effect on what will soon be three generations.

Changing times makes it impossible to compare athletes from different eras

Last week when I was sitting in the break room at one of my other jobs, I had a discussion with another employee VIEWPOINT about the sporting world.

We discussed how it is virtually impossible to compare sports heroes of the past with ones of today.

Take baseball for example. Baseball is the national pastime. It was the sport children in the 1920s and 1930s could hear on the radio as Babe Ruth put another pitch over the fence. This was way before television and the NBA came into existence.

MATT SPURGIN is a senior of 714 home runs has been surpassed by Hank Aaron, is Aaron a better player? Is Bob Feller a lesser player than Roger Clemens? You cannot compare the two players to each other.

Baseball is not the same game it used to be There have been numerous changes in baseball, just as there have been in all sports.

Baseball has added more teams, new fields and new rules. Back when Ruth played there was no such thing as a designated hitter. Players played on natural grass fields, not artificial turf.

Games were played during the afternoon and not at night. And just look at the equipment that the players use. No player who plays today would be willing to go back in time 60 years and use the equipment that players then used.

When baseball first started, players didn't

But even though Babe Ruth's career record even use gloves to field the ball, and today the average major league player has a $200 glove, expensive high-tech cleats, batting gloves and $150 sunglasses.

> Besides that, fielders have gloves that are custom made for their position. Outfielders have gloves with huge webs. They don't use those tiny pieces of leather that are barely bigger than their hand.

> Players today make 10 times more than the president of the United States. Many of them will spend time on the disabled list with injuries players of the past would have kept playing with. Ted Williams once played the remainder of a ballgame with a broken bone in his elbow after he ran into a wall - walls weren't padded

Yet another difference was the pitching.

Today, if a pitcher makes it into the sixth inning, he is doing pretty good. Today, there are multimillion dollar relievers who are paid to come in and pitch one inning

Ken Griffey Jr. facing Mariano Rivera or Mark Wohlers late in the game after he came in relief is not the same as a Mickey Mantle facing Bob Feller in the ninth inning.

Also, until 50 years ago, black players were not allowed to compete in the same league as the white players.

The sporting world has evolved, not just baseball. Look at professional football. Players are bigger and they now wear more pads. There are also changes in professional basketball shot clocks, the three point line, and even the key has a different shape. I could fill this entire issue of the Collegian with lists of everything that has changed in sports over the past 60 years. It is impossible to compare players of different generations. The sport, although still baseball, is a totally differ-

Maybe Babe Ruth or Ted Williams would be billionaire all-star players if they were playing in their prime today, or maybe Ruth would turn into a Bob Hamelin. Now, there are numerous professional sports, and they all will evolve and change. Probably not the same manner as in the All-Sport commercials, but there will continue to be change in sports.

It is impossible to say who is the greatest player of all time in any sport. They only thing anyone can say is that a certain player was the greatest player of his time.

At the end of each season, the teams are ranked and moved up or down depending on win-loss records. Prizes are given at the end of each of the three seasons.

"I like how we have three little seasons because it makes each division more competitive to each team's ability. If you do well in one division, you move up. If you don't do well, you move down or stay in that division," Jeremy Lehning, junior in secondary education, said.

Although there are not many teams, there is a lot of competition. "I enjoy playing in Manhattan, but I wish we had more teams in the women's competitive league because I am getting tired of playing the same teams over and over," Carrie Call, K-State graduate, said. A men's recreational league is also offered. In this league, there are no tournaments or prizes. Teams are guaranteed 11 games.

Two types of coed leagues are offered. The first is regular coed. Teams are divided into seven divisions and play in their division all summer. There is also a post-season tournament. Prizes are awarded for the league and the tournament.

"Coed softball is great because there is not as much pressure to do well. The teams that are good are good because of the women," Clint

Young signs rich contract extension keeping him at the top of pay lists

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ROCKLIN, Calif. - Steve Young, a two-time NFL MVP, signed a 6-year, $45 million contract extension Wednesday, keeping him one of the highest-paid players in the league.

The deal, announced at a news conference at the team's training camp, presumably surpasses the recently negotiated contract for Green Bay quarterback Brett Favre, who received a seven-year deal worth $47.25 million.

The contract also cleared $1.5 million in room under this season's salary cap, which the 49ers will use to sign their top draft pick, Virginia Tech quarterback Jim Druckenmiller.

Team president Carmen Policy said the contract assures Young's place with the team into the next century.

"He will be with us the remainder of his playing career. I think this contract guarantees that," Policy said.

Young, who was in the final year of his contract and would have been eligible for free agency after the coming season, said he was just happy to stay in San Francisco with his pals on

"It's a lot of fun to play football with your friends. We're truly committed to championship football and thrive on the challenge," he said. "It's my dream come true to continue to play in San Francisco.

Young, who turns 36 in October, is unlikely to see all the money in the deal because none is guaranteed.

Both Policy and Young's agent Leigh Steinberg said there's a strong possibility it will be restructured as early as next year, when Young is due to receive a $10 million base salary.

The pact for Young follows the Favre deal and one for Jacksonville's Mark Brunell, who agreed to a five-year, $30.5 million pact.

"I know it will be a relief for him to have it all behind and not even have to think about it anymore and just think football," 49er Coach Steve Mariucci said Tuesday, before the deal was announced. "I think that goes with anybody. I think with anybody in contract negotiations, that's a little unsettling. I'm glad it's going to be over with soon."

Young, who overcame a series of injuries last season to win his fifth passing title, took over San Francisco's starting job in 1991, when an elbow injury sidelined Joe Montana. In 1994,

Young led the 49ers to their fifth Super Bowl championship. The deal should provide the 49ers the leeway needed to come to terms with Druckenmiller, their only remaining unsigned player. Before the deal, the 49ers were just $107,000 below the $41.5 million cap limit. "We had to get additional cap room from someplace and behind Young and Jeff Brohm. Clark said he was making progress in his contract talks with Druckenmiller's agent, Gary Wichard. One area of dispute remains, however.

Steve was our No. 1 choice. That made more sense than some of the other things we considered," said Dwight Clark, the Virginia Tech, has missed two weeks of camp and is slated to spend his first year with the team as the No. 3 quarterback

Druckenmiller, who won 20 of 24 games as a starter at team's director of football operations.

"We're getting pretty close," Clark said. "There's just one stumbling block right now. It's fairly major, but it's nothing that's going to keep him out for a lot longer. I think we're getting towards the end of this thing and I hope to have it resolved fairly soon. I don't think it can go more than a couple of days."

Lollapalooza shakes Sandstone with diversity, energy

ECLECTIC SELECTION

ollapalooza kicked off Tuesday at Sandstone Ampitheatre with perhaps one of the most eclectic bills ever boasted by the music festival.

Reggae was even included on the menu, as Julian and Damian Marley (a.k.a. Jr. Gong), sons of the legendary Bob Marley, took to the main stage Tuesday afternoon.

One might think the two half-brothers could simply cash in by riding the coat tails of their patriarchal roots. However, the duo, accompanied by the Uprising band, presented many original songs that had a surprisingly distinctive

The size of the crowd increased dramatically throughout the performance as more and more people were drawn to the driven rhythm section of great reggae of the Marley brothers.

Diving back into the family album, the two went into a high-charged rendition of "Get Up, Stand Up," before moving into a hip-hop influenced version of "I Shot the Sheriff.

Other notable selections included "Loving Clear" from Julian's solo project, "Lion in the Morning."

"Everyone likes the underdog," Josh Day, concert-

In any case, this Dogg arrived in an armored van and was escorted by a throng of heavily beefed-up bodyguards.

However, with all this anticipation, Snoop's show seemed anti-climatic. The first third of the show was spent with Snoop's backup D.J.s, who led a rousing command for the crowd to make some noise. With sufficient inducement, the crowd began to get in the spirit.

Enter Snoop Doggy Dogg, wearing his trademark No. 39 jersey and rapping in his funky melodic drawl. He led the crowd in a few more choruses designed to get everyone pumped up. This culminated in Snoop's request for a smoke, which the delighted crowd gladly obliged by throwing a small barrage of joints on stage. After smoking up a bit, Snoop was good to go.

After working his way through some uncharted territory, he launched into "Gin and Juice," which had the crowd singing along

However, this delay to move into his more popular hard-core rap songs caused a bit of a lull.

"He did the biggest songs in the middle and at the end," Joe Italiano, concert-goer said. "It kind of dragged

Drag it did, but a good time was still had by all, which may have stemmed from the sheer novelty of the Doggfather's very presence, and had little to do with the lackluster performance. While Snoop and his D.J.s worked well together, the performance seemed generic, leaving one to speculate that Snoop was just going through the motions to appease the crowd However, if the crowd was left filling a little unsatisfied after Snoop, they certainly got more than their fill from Tool.

Sandstone absolutely exploded with energy as the show time for this L.A. based quartet approached. As the ecstasy rose to fever pitch, a few hundred of the more exuberant fans began tossing around water bottles and Finally, Tool took the stage, and launched the best show of the evening from a band of tremendous talent.

The crowd needed no prompting as Maynard James Keenan, clad in a bikini top and black latex pants, gyrated his hips on top of a burly masked man. The ampitheatre rocked as the sounds of "Jimmy" vibrated throughout the thoroughly electrified audience.

former interior designer from his old denim jeans.

"My nephew's request was what started my taking quilting seriously, Herr said.

Herr generally makes art quilts. She said there are a lot of rules for quilting that she thinks are limiting.

"I want to know who made these rules about what patterns and colors do and do not go together. I don't think the rules should always be followed," Herr said.

This message is relayed on the "Round Robin" quilt she and a group of women did. The quilt has the statement "good things don't happen because of silly rules" stitched in silvery pink thread in the center.

Herr said she does not consider herself to be a professional quilter.

"There is a fine line between an ama-

"I have a life outside of my quilting. The quilting bee allows all the members to quilt and socialize, so you get the best of both worlds," Herr said.

There is a large age-range of quilters, which makes the conversations interesting. The age-range of professional quilters is around 28 to 76, Herr said.

The most common form of quilting is folk-art quilting. Most quilters learn different sewing techniques at workshops given by professional quilters. Herr said quilting takes time and patience, and she believes frustration should make people work harder at something, instead of quiting. "So many quilters are good starters, not finishers," Herr said.

Herr uses lively contemporary colors in her quilts. She said she does not always use a pattern for her quilts.

"I just go into the studio and see what happens," Herr said.

Herr said that quilting is whatever a person wants it to be. This is demonstrated by the quilts on display. Original patterns, traditional patterns, bright colors, landscapes, blocks of unfinished quilts and various shapes are all incorporated into each of Herr's unique Herr's work will be displayed at Java Espresso & Bakery until the beginning of the fall semester. Her work is also displayed at the Morning Star bed and

9 children, 2 adults dead in Michigan automobile accident

CONCORD TOWNSHIP, Mich. - The pickup truck on the rolling gravel road was crammed with people - two mothers and 11 children on their way home after a warm afternoon at a lake. The mother who was driving had a suspended

The truck rolled past a stop sign at an intersection in southern Michigan on Tuesday and was crushed by a dump truck that apparently ran right over it. Both adults and nine children, none older than 12, were killed.

The two boys who survived, Adam Orange, 9, and Deandre Scott, 7 months, were in critical condition today at the University of Michigan Medical Center in Ann Arbor. Both had severe head injuries and broken bones.

"God, there was so many people in that truck," said Gerald Jones, who lives about a mile from the crash site 80 miles west of Detroit. "It was

The driver of the pickup apparently either ran the stop sign or failed to yield the right of way after stopping, Jackson County sheriff's Capt. Tony Philipps said. "That impact caused the pickup truck to disintegrate."

The dump truck was on a paved road, with no stop sign posted. Its driver was not hurt.

The dead women were identified as the driver, Elaine Jackson, 24, of Albion, and her friend Letechia Scott, 19

Ms. Jackson's driver's license was suspended this month, according to records from the Secretary of State's office. She had failed to pay tickets from May for allegedly speeding, having no proof of insurance, failing to yield, and a seat belt violation, the records said.

"This is obviously a tragedy of unprecedented proportions," Jackson County Sheriff Henry Zavislak said. "When you look at both the ages and the number of victims, it's clearly the worst accident in our county and maybe even in the state. It's a horrific kind of accident."

"I can't believe I've lost them," Barbara Bell, Ms. Jackson's mother, told the Detroit Free Press. Five of the dead children were Ms. Jackson's.

The women and three of the children were in the truck's extended cab and the other children were in the truck bed, which was enclosed by some sort of shell, Philipps said. It is not illegal to ride in the open bed of a pickup truck, he said, adding, "This accident will reopen that issue." Tests were also planned to determine whether alcohol was involved.

The sheriff's department said there are no posted speed limits in the area and it could not immediately determine how fast the trucks were going when the crash happened about 6:10 p.m.

Three children initially survived the crash but one, a 3-year-old boy, died during surgery late Tuesday.

The dead children were identified as Ms. Jackson's children - Terry Jackson Jr., 9; 8-yearold twins Luke and Isaih, Sierra, 6, and Jeremiah,

A grandmother of some of the victims told authorities the group was returning from a lake outing, Maino said. Outside the emergency room at W.A. Foote Memorial Hospital in Jackson, where the bodies were being identified, friends of the families held each other and wept.

The blood-stained wreckage of the red pickup was barely recognizable, lying on the side of the road. The larger truck was off amid some trees and the backhoe lay on its side in the road.

KANSAS CITY, Kan. - Two brothers of convicted killer Gary Kleypas said Wednesday their father browbeat and abused his sons, in testimony defense lawyers hope jurors will use to spare Kleypas the death penalty.

Kleypas, 41, was convicted Friday of capital murder, attempted rape and aggravated burglary in the March 1996 stabbing death of Carrie Williams, 20, of Parsons.

The penalty phase of the trial began Tuesday in Wyandotte County District Court where the case had been moved because of pretrial publicity.

John Kleypas, the eldest of Gary Kleypas' three brothers, testified Wednesday that their abusive father often browbeat his sons. John Kleypas told defense attorney Ben Wood that the brothers feared their father.

Another brother, Curtis Kleypas, echoed the testimony. Grace Wools, a cousin of Kleypas, testified about family reunions in which Kleypas appeared normal and happy. Wood also played a videotape showing Kleypas as a child. The patchwork video showed the young boy bathing in a tub, dressed in cowboy clothes, riding on horses and playing on the beach.

But under cross-examination by assistant attorney general John Bork, Wools said Kleypas was capable of controlling his actions - a key component of the prosecution's claim that Kleypas knew what he was doing when he killed Williams.
